This question comes up sometimes. The elderly are clearly at real and high excess risk - their immune systems seem to have a much harder time responding to the novelty of the virus. Nice article on the issue here:

Two underappreciated facts about all the elective surgeries we are delaying right now

(1) Over time, some elective surgeries become necessary, can't delay any more surgeries

(2) Some hospitals will go broke without elective surgeries

Disagree. From what I've heard, (practically) ALL hospitals will go broke without elective surgeries - they are probably the most profitable part of the revenue stream.

At the moment hospitals have some revenue from all the ICU care, but yes, as COVID cases decline most hospitals will not stay in business without elective surgeries.

Attention citizens! Your Dept. Of Pandemia wishes to cheer your spirits with a party for all citizens to celebrate the end of the lockdowns. Date TBD. We were thinking next week, now it looks more May. Or July. But it'll happen. Promise. It's in our models. Attention citizens!

How many NYT reporters do you think wake up each day and instantly check Florida's case count, hoping for it to spike so they can publish their "see what Florida's lockdown delay caused" articles?

Weird how slow these outbreaks are, huh.

Wow. So this is a non-random sample and only one data point, but at a testing site in Chicago 30-50% of people are testing positive for CV antibodies (meaning they have already had the virus). WE NEED WIDESPREAD ANTIBODY TESTING.

Roseland Hospital phlebotomist: 30% of those tested have coronavirus antibody

BUSINESS

By Staff reports |

Community Hospital said Thursday that 30% to 50% of patients tested for the coronavirus have antibodies while only around 10% to 20% of those tested have the active virus.

Sumaya Owaynat, a phlebotomy technician, said she tests between 400 and 600 patients on an average day in the parking lot at Roseland Community Hospital. Drive-thru testing is from 9 a.m. to noon and 2 to 4 p.m. each day. However, the hospital has a limited number of tests they can give per day.

Owaynat said the number of patients coming through the testing center who appear to have

At this point, given the slow growth in hospitalizations, the empty hospitals outside NYC, the striking age gaps in deaths, and the increasing worldwide evidence #SARSCoV2 is more widespread than we realized, the burden must be on people who want to keep the lockdowns in place.

this is misleading because at the same site 10-20% of people are positive for the virus. That's a very BAD news if it holds across country, since it would imply 1: 3 or 1:4 relationship between infected and reported cases. German study shows at least 1:7 and Austrian 1:10.

5/ Further, it highlights the uncertainties around dying WITH as opposed to dying OF Covid. Worst of all, given the very basic data missing here, if some of these people did not have lab-confirmed tests, it may not even be certain that they all died WITH Covid.

Putting aside the question whether lockdowns work at all - the economic and societal devastation they have caused are national, while the crisis is localized to NYC. You may be seeing morgue trucks, but in Oklahoma hospitals are shutting. How does that response make sense?

BTW - this only INCREASES the pressure on public health officials to devise reasonable metrics and move ahead with antibody testing. If we are going to start reopening, we need all the information we can about how many people have already been infected.

Dr. Bedford - Do you have any estimate on the percentage of the US population that has now been infected with #SARS_CoV2? Or the infection fatality rate? Are the German antibody data likely to be a reliable predictor? Thanks very much, Alex > Earliest transmission in the US was January 2020. There is zero probability it was circulating in fall 2019.

A judge has issued a temporary restraining order allowing (drive-in) Easter services. Expect to see more cases soon (Michigan maybe next?) - I imagine a number of federal judges will stand up for the Ccnstitution.

This small Oregon study has gotten little attention - it shows 1 strong positive and 3 weak positive samples out of 40 people in/around Portland. Of note, the strong positive responder reported severe respiratory illness in December 2019.

Also of note:

Two of the three knew each other (suggesting the test is accurate)

None of the homeless subjects had antibodies (calling into question social distancing)

Hey @IanFelipeSays - with sufficient funding, how long would you need to conduct a regional or national randomized antibody sample? How much would it cost? How many people would need to be tested for reliable results?

Time to start using more straightforward language and calling out people who don't tell the truth, like [illegible]. The original model explicitly accounted for the effect of lockdowns. It was wrong in real-time, embarrassingly so; that's why it's been updated. (It's still wrong.)

I will say the Twitter threats are generally obviously just idiots acting out: My ratio: 50 Twitter threats = 5 threatening call (how'd you get my number) = 1 creepy letter (great, now you know where my family lives).

It should say "us" in there, but this diagram could be the Team Reality logo. Don't know why this is so hard for media screamers to see: even 61,000 deaths is a rounding error on the uglier totalitarian gov't policies of the 20th century. The risks are real in every direction.

Iran begins lifting restrictions after brief virus lockdown

by AMIR VAHDAT | Associated Press
Saturday, April 11th 2020

Authorities had ordered most government agencies and all non-essential businesses to remain closed for a week after the Nowruz holiday ended on April 4.

In Egypt, meanwhile, police used tear gas to disperse a group of villagers who tried to stop the burial of a physician who died from the COVID-19 illness caused by the virus. The villagers feared that the burial would spread contagion.

Government offices outside Iran's capital, Tehran, reopened Saturday with a third of all employees working from home, state media reported. Women who have young children were given priority in deciding who works remotely. Businesses outside next Saturday, provided they register with authorities and follow guidelines on social distancing set out by the Health Ministry. Government offices in the capital will reopen with two-thirds of employees coming in.

The Health Ministry meanwhile reported another 135 deaths, bringing the overall toll to 4,357. Iran has reported more than 70,000 confirmed cases, and authorities say more than 45,000 have recovered.

The virus causes mild to moderate symptoms in most patients, who recover within a few weeks. But it is highly contagious and can cause severe illness or death, particularly in elderly patients or those

Dr. Bedford - based on that infection figure, what is your estimate of the IFR? Also, do you have any estimate of how long a randomized antibody study might take and how many people it would need to capture to be accurate?

> Trevor Bedford @trvrb
> This would give 5-10 million infections in the US or about 2-3% cumulative prevalence. This is a long way from the 50% (R0 of 2) to 66% (R0 of 3) we'd need for herd immunity. 15/18

We can do the naive math ourselves. At time of his tweet, USA had 21,656 deaths.
If 5M infected = IFR of 0.43%
If 10M infected = IFR of 0.22%

0.47% IFR

The smart set would be well advised to spend a lot less time worrying about the Dunning–Kruger effect (which is basically a fancy way to say, "No, yoooou're stupid!") and a lot more worrying about the Milgram and Stanford Prison experiments.

And the other issue is that the Wall Street/hedge fund guys have now done enough work to know the risks of the virus have been overstated. But they are not yet focused on the broader risks.

Okay, I'll note it. In Colorado, population 5.8 million, approximately 275 people under 50 have needed to be hospitalized for #COCID in the last month. Not in ICUs, just admitted to hospitals at some point. (The numbers of those currently hospitalized are not shown.)

Outbreak Latest Updates Tracking the Outbreak

LIVE UPDATES Updated April 13, 2020, 5:55 a.m. ET

Coronavirus Live Updates: As Social Limits Slow Spread, Calls Grow to Ease Them

Policymakers around the world are debating when and how to start reopening businesses. President Trump called on governors to "get ready." Oil nations agreed to the largest production cut ever negotiated.

RIGHT NOW Spain eased some restrictions,

Limits on public life slow the outbreak, but patience is wearing thin.

After a solitary Easter Sunday, Americans entered another week in social isolation confronted by two contradictory facts.

The lockdowns that have transformed daily life across the country are working, slowing the spread of the virus, protecting hospitals and health care workers, and saving lives.

But the lockdowns have brought commerce to a shuddering halt, forcing more than 16 million Americans to file for unemployment benefits, threatening to provoke a deep and long-lasting recession, and placing children and parents under stress. The virus has claimed the most lives in Italy and Spain, both announced the first tentative steps to ease restrictions on some nonessential employees, allowing them to return to work. But strict, stay-at-home rules will remain in effect for the overwhelming majority of people.

With more than 550,000 detected cases and 22,000 deaths, the United States is the epicenter of the global outbreak. But as the number of new infections and hospitalizations in New York and other hard-hit parts of America have stabilized in recent days, it has also become the center of the debate over when and how to reopen the economy.

That's my impression as well.

Small business owners/staff affected understand- in very real terms- how catastrophic this is now, but also how damaging it will be.

This is going to sound weird, but if we're going to come out of this with our freedoms intact, then we may have to court further economic disaster, until the powers that be are so desperate to open the economy that they do it without conditions.

Sorry, this is nonsense. The hospitals are not just happy but eager to admit anyone with a #COVID DRG code; the payments are higher and they desperately need the revenue. This true everywhere nationally and increasingly in NY. It's called reporting; try it.

Ryan Tate @ryantate
The curve is not flattening in NY. They have distorted the hospitalization numbers ("don't go in until you are losing consciousness") and the death count (died at home? doesn't count and we won't test you) but the bodies keep piling up.

I am going to follow up with data directly from Sweden but it appears deaths are plunging - not a shock, given the ICU trends. Recall, Sweden has no lockdown. Deaths per-capita have been far lower than the U.K., Italy, France, or Spain, just higher than other Nordic countries.

The bonus is public; I have already talked to billing experts and others who acknowledge that hospitals (which generally code as aggressively as possible even when they aren't under extraordinary financial stress) are trying to get it.

The bill would provide additional funds to providers caring for Medicare beneficiaries. Specifically, it would:

- Eliminate the Medicare sequester from May 1 through Dec. 31, 2020;
- During the emergency period, provide a 20% add-on to the DRG rate for patients with COVID-19. This add-on would apply to patients treated at inpatient prospective payment system (IPPS) urban and rural hospitals;
- Expand the existing option for hospitals to request and receive "accelerated" Medicare payments, which are essentially an advance on future payments, including to ensure they are available to children's, cancer and critical access hospitals (CAHs). The legislation would increase the amount most hospitals could receive based on prior payments to 100% (from 70%); CAHs would be eligible to receive up to 125%. Hospitals would have four months until recoupment would

Why, @MarkDLevine? Who made the rule that NYC hospital admissions need to be below 200 for 10 days straight, and why? What's the logic? Can the system not handle more than 200 admissions? What if they are below 200 for 9 days and 201 on the 10th? Does the clock start again?

This very interesting analysis came in just as the three Democratic governors of CA, OR, and WA announced a pact to reopen WITHOUT an explicit goal of no infections or deaths. (A long way from no @nfl season, as @DAgovernor said just days ago.) governor.wa.gov/news-media/was …

> There's a political arms race now between red states and blue states on how to reopen. That may speed things up. Dem governors trying to wrest the power away from trump. Gop governors like Abbott in Texas trying to move quickly. The arms race is real and this may create competition to see who can open faster

Alex, the IHME prediction for deaths TODAY, 4/13, was 2150. The avg. of covid tracking project & worldometer, actual deaths today =1404, so in real time, IHME already overestimated actual deaths by >50%, lending little confidence in their "new" estimate of 68K deaths by Aug 4th.

The nice thing about this estimate from the point of view of @IHME_UW is that it can never be proven wrong. And they really need that.

Outside NYC they sure are. That's why they're furloughing tens or hundreds of thousands of employees. It's amazing how little anyone in NY knows about what's happening anywhere else.

With this - even more than when [redacted] put out his magic time-traveling lockdown graph - it's starting to feel like the governors are just pushing to see if anyone is paying attention - or like Munchausen's syndrome by proxy, with all of America playing the child.

Hi Alex,

I'm a reporter with VICE and I'm interested in doing a Q&A with you about your coronavirus work. Your positions on COVID and COVID guidelines have certainly struck a nerve with many people and I think a straightforward Q&A--where you can lay out where and how media has biffed coverage of the coronavirus and I can ask you follow up questions about it--would be legitimately useful for our readers. I'm envisioning a fairly free-flowing discussion which I would then transcribe for publication.

Is this something you'd be interested in?

Alex Berenson

I'm very short on time. If you want to ask questions over email I will try to answer them, but only on the condition you don't do it Chatter-style and annotate or second-guess me after I have answered (in other words, it would have to be the equivalent of a live on-air interview). You ask, I answer, that's the end of it

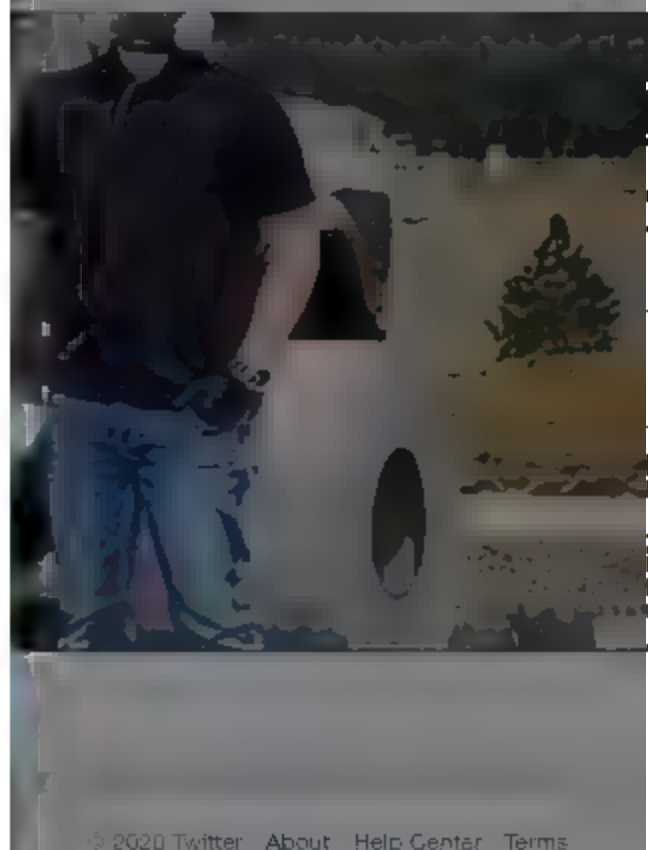
What is happening with the COVID crisis, in your view?

What is the media getting wrong about the coronavirus crisis?

When and why did you personally start to doubt the official narrative of the COVID crisis?



What is your medical and public health background?

How do you answer people who say that the earliest, most dire projections of COVID's impact have been avoided all clear that lockdowns help to reduce spread in the short-term - and in fact they may actually worsen it and thus worsen the health system strain they are meant to prevent. I don't mean to say this case is proven, but there is considerable evidence for it.

Further, the University of Washington model was released after the lockdowns began, and explicitly accounted for their effects - yet it was still very wrong.

> Do you think the acute crisis has passed in New York City? And how do you define acute crisis?

For several days, new hospitalizations have been effectively flat in New York State (including the city), which means that New York hospitals are no longer facing a major wave of new cases that threatens to overwhelm them. That's how I define acute crisis. Initially, we were told that the point of the lockdowns was to "flatten the curve" - to reduce the

What is happening with the COVID crisis, in your view?

Although SARS-2-COV is a real virus that appears to pose a serious threat to the elderly and some people with chronic conditions, we have increasing evidence that its risks have been overstated - certainly to the general population under 50 and especially to anyone under 30, and that the draconian lockdowns we have undertaken may have economic, educational, and

1/ Yep, the public health folks, after a month of promising that within two weeks we'd be near collapse, are now making the big pivot to the "second wave." I don't know if people will put up with this. Though they've already put up with way more than I expected...

This is fiction. I can't say it strongly enough. Coronavirus infectioN fatality rates for anyone under 20 are so close to zero they effectively cannot be measured. YOUR CHILDREN ARE NOT AT RISK. This disinformation-I don't know what else to call it - has to stop.

Not even what Oz said. Oz said letting kids go back to school (which he was advocating) might increase the (miniscule -- my word) mortality rate by 2-3%, not that 2-3% of the kids would die. You'd think blue checks like Eichenwald would think a second before tweeting the absurd.

Wait, the model that got everything wrong in real-time (and even after multiple updates couldN't match ACTUAL data) is now making estimates for a past that didn't exist, and comparing them to current marshmallow man death figures? Oh. Sounds plausible.

> Eric Feigl-Ding @DrEricDing
> New epidemiology estimates that 90% of US death could have been prevented by just acting 2 weeks earlier. The estimated number of deaths falls sharply with earlier interventions - th US delay cost thousands of lives.

"Second-wave outbreak" is the new "wait two weeks."

The nice part - for Team Apocalypse, anyway: a "second wave" can come anytime, so it can never be wrong. (Cult leaders learned this trick long ago. Just don't offer a date and the flock will never lose hope for the end.)

I am going to follow up with data directly from Sweden but it appears deaths are plunging - not a shock, given the ICU trends. Recall, Sweden has no lockdown. Deaths per-capita have been far lower than the U.K., Italy, France, or Spain, just higher than other Nordic countries.

foreign doctors could help fight coronavirus. But the U.S. is blocking many.

for patients, as the number of cases continues to grow and as maintaining a full supply of health care workers, who are themselves falling ill, grows ever more challenging.

"I am asking health care professionals across the country, if you don't have a health care crisis in your community, please come help us in New York right now," Gov. Andrew M. Cuomo said on March 30.

In California, Gov. Gavin Newsom issued an urgent call at the end of March for additional health care workers to help fight the outbreak, suggesting that recently retired physicians Sorry, this is nonsense. The hospitals are not just happy but eager to admit anyone with a #COVID DRG code; the payments are higher and they desperately need the revenue. This true everywhere nationally and increasingly in NY. It's called reporting; try it.

Ryan Tate @ryantate
The curve is not flattening in NY. They have distorted the hospitalization numbers ("don't go in until you are losing consciousness") and the death count (died at home? doesn't count and we won't test you) but the bodies keep piling up.

By: Steven Ponson

Update:

The City of Jacksonville is partially reopening beaches and city parks being Friday afternoon at 5. Mayor Lenny Curry

"This could be the beginning back to normal life." Curry says.

The beaches will only be open from 6AM until 11AM then again from 5PM until 8PM. Meanwhile, the parks will reopen during normal hours from dawn until dusk, but Curry says public gathering spaces like pavilions and picnic areas will still be closed. He says social distancing guidelines should still be followed.

This is the @IMHE_UW model for #Covid_19, the new US standard. It was put out SIX days ago (post lockdown). It projects New York State will have 50,000 hospitalizations TODAY. Instead NYS has 12,000. Wrong by 4x in under a week. What on earth are we doing?

covid19.healthdata.org/projections

The charts below show projected hospital resource use based on COVID-19 deaths. The model assumes continued social distancing until the end of May 2020.

In locations without social distancing measures currently in place, we have assumed they will be in place within seven days of the last model update. If not, the number of deaths and burden on their hospital systems will likely be higher than the model predicts.

For answers to other frequently asked questions about the modeling,

1/ I try to analyze dispassionately. But I will admit I am ANGRY about the way we have largely ignored the massive harm lockdowns and school closings have on kids. Remember: anyone under 30 is at almost ZERO risk here (there are always outliers; planes crash but flying is safe).

2/ Children, more than anyone else, suffer immediately from the lockdowns. They're denied school. They're denied normal socializing with their friends. In many places they have even - bizarrely - been denied the chance to play outside.

Alex Berenson @AlexBerenson · Apr 10

3/ The stress even on healthy families is incredible. And for children in troubled families, the cost is far higher; for those kids, schools may well be the only chance they have to be seen every day by an adult who is not high or abusive.

Alex Berenson @AlexBerenson · Apr 10

4/ Of all the choices we've made, sacrificing the mental health of children at zero risk from this illness is the LEAST acceptable. But so many in the media are young and don't have children, or perhaps are married couples with one child (an equation that makes care easier).

Indoor transmission of SARS-CoV-2

This article is a preprint and has not been peer-reviewed [what does this mean?]. It reports new medical research that has yet to be evaluated and so should not be used to guide clinical practice.

Abstract

where and how SARS-CoV-2 is transmitted. Methods: Case reports were extracted from the local Municipal Health Commissions of 320 prefectural cities (municipalities) in China, not including Hubei province, between 4 January and 11 February 2020. We identified all outbreaks involving three or more cases and reviewed the major characteristics of the enclosed spaces in which the outbreaks were reported and associated indoor environmental issues. Results: Three hundred and eighteen outbreaks with three or more cases were identified, involving 1245 confirmed cases in 120 prefectural cities. We divided the venues in which the outbreaks occurred into six categories: homes, transport, food, entertainment, shopping, and miscellaneous. Among the identified outbreaks, 53.8% involved three cases, 3/ Finally, about 80% of the outbreaks were exclusively intrafamilial - only 8% involved strangers. Where is the evidence that routine work in stores and offices - MUCH LESS OUTDOOR ACTIVITIES - is a major contributor to #SARS-CoV2 transmission?

Serious questions for @MassDPH - given this backdating, is ANY death in a long-term facility now NOT considered a #COVID death? And how many of these are based on actual positive test results?

Nichole Davis @NicholeDWBZ
As for deaths in connection with #COVID19, @MassDPH reports:
- 957 people have lost their lives
- 113 deaths reported in past 24 hours, varying dates of death btwn 3/31 and 4/13

Another dead child. Not from #COVID, from abuse. The third at this hospital in a month (6x the usual rate).

Kids are at roughly NO risk from #COVID. Lockdowns keep vulnerable ones at home with abusive parents. Now some are dying. Not hyperbole, fact.

The "monster is still out there"? What monster? It's not a zombie, it's a virus that appears to be somewhat more dangerous than the flu to elderly, though - thankfully - much less dangerous to the young. Does @GovMikeDeWine think he instills confidence when he speaks this way?

What a farce. This is the same as every hospital in the state. A direct result of these sociopathic measures to "flatten the curve."

The worst part is that non-hospital workers think hospitals in the state are COVID-flooded war zones, so many are avoiding seeking treatment.

Mass now separates out hospital data, still believe its cumulative, no discharge #'s - 4/14, 3615 hospitalized (around 12% of all positive cases) 965 ICU (26% of hospitalized #) which is not surprising as 48% of the deaths are now from elderly care facilities.

1/ No. Wrong again. The paper he is quoting says that reopening schools may - not will, MAY - result in a 2-4% increase in deaths from the virus RELATIVE TO NOT REOPENING. That is, if there would be 50,000 deaths with schools closed, there would be 51,000-52,000 if they open.

Even if you ignore the economic impact, this is alarming because it means the people who normally take the "typical tests" are not addressing their healthcare needs. The only thing more scary than economic data are surveys indicating how many people are delaying needed care.

5/ Notably this bit of hysteria from [redacted] – a [redacted] inveetigative editor. He wrote that 60% of the "additional" deaths occurred in emergency rooms as people awaited care. What? The document actually says that 60% of the new "probable" deaths were in hospitals OR ERs...

6/ And, of course, there is no description of whether ANYONE was "awaiting" care. The tweet this presents an entirely fictional description of the already dubious data (though, to be fair, it semi-accurately summarizes a @business piece which is also way off). Great job, team!

Like child abuse, domestic violence appears to be surging during the lockdowns:

> Calls to UK Domestic Abuse Helplines have more than doubled since the lockdown. Victims should know that if they are in danger, they can dial 999, then press 55 and remain silent. Police will know that the caller is in danger and cannot speak. Spread this wide.

From a reader in Michigan. I thought her comments about anxiety and the likelihood it will only increase with time were particularly telling.

2. The psychological implications of this. I have an anxiety disorder, panic disorder. And what anybody with an anxiety disorder who has done any CBT knows, avoidance is what perpetuates anxiety. You start feeling anxious in a situation, you leave or avoid the situation, the anxiety goes away, and you believe on some deep unconscious level that the thing that saved you from the worst-case scenarios of your anxiety was your avoidance. So you avoid more, and the more you avoid, the more anxious you get. The ONLY THING that breaks that cycle is refusing to avoid what you are anxious about and seeing that you are okay. It wasn't your avoidance that kept you safe. The more people are under house arrest and being bombarded by the message that the only thing keeping them from dying immediately of Covid is being inside, the harder it will be for them to face their anxieties and go out and live life again. We are causing people tremendous harm by falsely claiming that lockdowns are the only thing keeping them alive right now.

1. The near-total shutdown of all non-Covid-related health care. Why is this not getting any press? My husband, who has a chronic liver disease, has a maintenance treatment and a liver biopsy indefinitely postponed. Nobody is getting routine cancer screenings. Organ transplants and heart surgeries are being posted. Kids aren't getting physicals or eye exams. Do we think there will be no consequences to this? If there won't be, then we've all been duped into spending tons of money on health care we apparently never needed. If we actually needed this care, then of course there will be consequences (one likely involving a lot of illnesses and deaths that could have been avoided) to denying people this care for months, potentially many months. Who made the decision to ration health care in such a way that all of it would be going to theoretical Covid patients? What was the thinking behind that?

SOme data on the impact of unemployment on death and morbidity=. Form the Boston Herald today. A snippet: "If unemployment hits 32%, 77,000 Americans will die from overdoses and suicides as a result of layoffs"

> The latest unemployment update confirms that over the last three weeks, nearly 17 million Americans have been laid off because of the shutdown. That's one-tenth of the nation's workforce. It's not just an economic fact. It's a public health disaster. If the shutdown is dragged on, as many public health experts recommend, it is almost certain to kill more Americans than coronavirus.
> The academics and public health officials who have concocted models of the virus's spread are telling us that we have to continue the shutdown to save thousands of lives. But none of their models considers the deaths that will be caused by unemployment.
> Before the virus hit, America's unemployment rate was 3.5%, the lowest in 50 years. Now Goldman Sachs predicts unemployment could spike to 15% by midyear. A St. Louis Federal Reserve economist grimly predicts 32% unemployment — worse than during the Great Depression.
> No model or guesswork is required to foresee the deadly impact. Job losses cause extreme suffering. Every 1% hike in the unemployment rate will likely produce a 3.3% increase in drug overdose deaths and a 0.99% increase in suicides, according to data provided by the National Bureau of Economic Research and the medical journal Lancet. These are facts based on experience, not models. If unemployment hits 32%, some 77,000 Americans are likely to die from suicide and drug overdoses as a result of layoffs. Scientists call these fatalities deaths of despair.
> Then add the predictable deaths from alcohol abuse caused by unemployment. Health economist Michael French from the University of Miami and a co-author found a "significant association between job loss" and binge drinking and alcoholism.
> The impact of layoffs goes beyond suicide, drug overdosing and drinking. Overall, the death rate for an unemployed person is 63% higher than for someone with a job, according to findings in Social Science & Medicine.
> Layoff-related deaths are likely to far outnumber the 60,400 coronavirus deaths predicted through August.
> This comparison is not meant to underrate the horror of coronavirus for those who get it and their families.

Short version: spread is most efficient intrafamilially or nosocomially (even @WHO agrees) so lockdowns may worsen the short-term surges they're meant to stop. (Lockdowns drive panic/short-term healthcare use, thus hospital transmission- aka people coughing on each other in ERs.)

Personally, I think the NYT coverage has been excellent. It's a complicated, contentious story, and undoubtedly it's possible to find flaws in particular stories. That's why I'd like to see you try to articulate your views in full -- much harder than Twitter potshots. Try Medium.

What you call Twitter "potshots" have been an invaluable source of information, data and hope for many people, far better than anything the NYT has put out. You don't get to decide how people consume their info and whether it's valuable to them or not.

1/ A quick update on lockdown-free Sweden: It reported 130 deaths today - for 414 the last three days - its highest three-day death count so far. No doubt the media will report this fact with its usual hysteria and demand Sweden explain itself...

There was a study done in some country, I forget which (Denmark, maybe? or Korea/Taiwan?) which found that something like 4.6% (or some such number) of school children were infected. IIRC the idea was that not only do they handle this well, they just don't get as easily infected.

COVID-19 outbreak at a large homeless shelter in Boston: Implications for universal testing

doi: https://doi.org/10.1101/2020.04.12.20059618

This article is a preprint and has not been certified by peer review [what does this mean?]. It reports new medical research that has yet to be evaluated and so should not be used to guide clinical practice.

from a single large homeless shelter in Boston, Boston Health Care for the Homeless Program conducted symptom assessments and polymerase chain reaction (PCR) testing for SARS-CoV-2 among all guests residing at the shelter over a 2-day period. Of 408 participants, 147 (36.0%) were PCR-positive for SARS-CoV-2. COVID-positive individuals were more likely to be male (p<0.001) but did not differ significantly from COVID-negative individuals with respect to other demographic and clinical characteristics. Cough (7.5%), shortness of breath (1.4%), and fever (0.7%) were all uncommon among COVID-positive individuals. Our findings illustrate the rapidity with which COVID-19 can be widely transmitted in a homeless shelter setting and suggest that universal PCR testing, rather than a symptom triggered approach, may be a better strategy for identifying and mitigating COVID-19 among

And even now is doing everything possible to push a narrative about the lockdowns that is increasingly divorced from reality. The truth is there's nothing "complicated" when a 10-day-old model predicts four times as many hospitalizations as are actually occurring.

There is no consensus from Doctors on how to handle this. Epidemiologists are trained in 1 thing: fighting the virus at all costs. Ask a surgeon and he'll suggest surgery. Ask a holistic healer and she'll suggest alternative therapies. (1)

It's almost certainly confirmation and availability bias.

When you watch the pressers, you can watch the journalists write the articles about how badly we're managing the crisis as they are hearing how we are managing the crisis.

They know the story; they're gathering details.

Aaron Pogue @AaronPogue · Apr 14

Of course, J School exists to teach journalists to avoid those traps. So either the NYT is staffed with people who disregard all their professional training in the face of a crisis, or there's something nefarious going on.

Which I realize now was the original point.

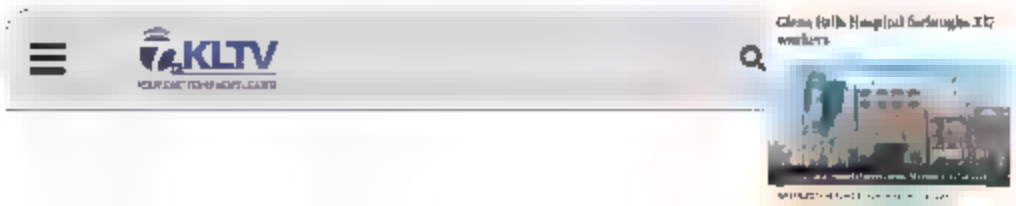
1/ And @nytimes continues to slide further into fiction this morning with this gem: the US needs "foreign doctors" because hospitals "are scrambling to address a shortage of medical professionals... (and keep) a full supply of health care workers."

Foreign doctors could help fight coronavirus. But the U.S. is blocking many.

hot spots are scrambling to address a shortage of medical professionals to help care for patients, as the number of cases continues to grow and as maintaining a full supply of health care workers, who are themselves falling ill, grows ever more challenging.

"I am asking health care professionals across the country, if you don't have a health care crisis in your community, please come help us in New York right now," Gov. Andrew M. Cuomo said on March 30.



In California, Gov. Gavin Newsom issued an urgent call at the end of March for additional health care workers to help fight the outbreak, suggesting that recently retired physicians

And yet New York City's all-cause mortality has risen by a total of 3,000 deaths in the last five weeks - not 11,500...

> Scott Gottlieb, MD @ScottGottliebMD
> 1/2 New York City, with population of 8.4 million, has 11,477 confirmed and probable #COVID19 deaths. Even if everyone in the city had covid (8.4M people) which is improbable, then 11,477 deaths would put its case fatality rate higher than what's seen in seasonal flu. #NotTheFlu > rapidly as the situation evolves. He said the decision to report probable Covid-19 deaths was made to be more transparent with the public about the magnitude of the outbreak.

This figure is from the city health commissioner:

> NYC Health Department Commissioner Dr. Oxiris Barbot said most people who have died from Covid-19 were diagnosed in hospitals. However, the city has seen significantly more people dying at home than usual, Barbot said.

This is insane. And doubly (triply? quadruply?) insane because she is 47 (per Wikipedia) and thus at little risk. The hysteria has gone so deep so fast it's increasingly obvious some people will need years to recover. And some never will.

My former coworker buried her 42 year old daughter last Monday. No preexisting conditions. She was an administrator of a nursing home and got Covid19 there. Yes, the risk may be low but at 41 I don't want to get it.

It's tragic. Issue being, perfectly healthy 20 and 30 somethings can catch the flu and drop dead with no comorbidities. It's tragic, unforeseeable, and it happens.

Is the rate so much higher for this that younger demographics need to worry more about COVID than the flu?

The @stanford antibody testing is out - it estimates ~3% of people in Santa Clara County (CA) have been infected and recovered, 50-plus times the estimate of confirmed active cases. More evidence #SARSCoV2 is far more widespread and thus less dangerous than expected.

COVID-19 Antibody Seroprevalence in Santa Clara County, California without seroprevalence data to inform epidemic parameters. We measured the seroprevalence of antibodies to SARS-CoV-2 in Santa Clara County. Methods On 4/3-4/4, 2020, we tested county residents for antibodies to SARS-CoV-2 using a lateral flow immunoassay. Participants were recruited using Facebook ads targeting a representative sample of the county by demographic and geographic characteristics. We report the prevalence of antibodies to SARS-CoV-2 in a sample of 3,330 people, adjusting for zip code, sex, and race/ethnicity. We also adjust for test performance characteristics using 3 different estimates: i) the test manufacturer's data, ii) a sample of 37 positives and 30 negatives controls tested at Stanford, and iii) a pooled weighted estimate. Results The unadjusted prevalence of antibodies to SARS-CoV-2 in Santa Clara [illegible] 1.5% [illegible] 2.8%. Conclusions The population prevalence of SARS-CoV-2 antibodies in Santa Clara County implies that the infection is much more widespread than indicated by the number of confirmed cases. Population prevalence estimates can now be used to calibrate epidemic and mortality projections.

field hospital deployed to CenturyLink Field Event Center to the U.S. Department of Defense.

The 250-bed facility, for which setup began on March 30, was intended to help Washington state's health care system tend to non Covid-19 patients in the event of a hospital surge.

But just three days after announcing the facility was ready to receive patients, officials say they're returning the hospital to the federal government.

The action is aimed at helping another state with a more significant need for hospital capacity at this time, according to the Governor's Office. The facility did not see any patients during the time it was slated to operate in Seattle.

I'm more pessimistic. If we're missing 90 percent of cases, call it an IFR of 1.1. If we're missing 95 percent, call it north of .5. That's basically my guess range.

We don't know the statistical uncertainty of the German estimate because they have not published their study. So ~0.37 could have a significant error range.

Some actual - and very ugly - facts slipped onto the top of @nytimes:

Global Economy Faces Worst Slump Since Great Depression, I.M.F. Says

- Global growth will contract by 3 percent in 2020, a far more severe drop than the last recession, the International Monetary Fund projected.
- A rift between the White House and states is threatening a cohesive response to the virus crisis.
- New York reported 778 more deaths as the toll neared 11,000 in the state. Here's the latest.

And even now is doing everything possible to push a narrative about the lockdowns that is increasingly divorced from reality. The truth is there's nothing "complicated" when a 10-day-old model predicts four times as many hospitalizations as are actually occurring.

That's just a colossal failure with terrible consequences. The hard question is why, and what to do next. But pretending that the answer is "the lockdowns worked" WHEN THE MODEL EXPLICITLY ACCOUNTED FOR LOCKDOWNS is simply an insult to every @nytimes reader, and everyone else.

Now @NYCMayor says the city will count people who died "indirectly" from #COVID in its ever-rising death counts. What does that even mean? Can we assume every person who dies in NYC will be counted as a virus death unless proven otherwise? And how far back will the backdating go?

The New York Times

Breaking News: New York City's coronavirus death toll soared past 10,000 after officials added more than 3,700 people who had never tested positive for the virus but were

N.Y.C. Death Toll Soars Past 10,000 in Revised Virus

But the discrepancy between the Fire Department numbers from this year, at the height of the epidemic, compared with those of last year suggests that many of those who died probably were infected.

"The driver of this huge uptick in deaths at home is Covid-19. And some people are dying directly of it, and some people are dying indirectly of it, but it is the tragic 'X' factor here," said Mayor Bill de Blasio on Thursday.

Some of the deaths of people at home or in the street were unrelated to the virus.

We also don't really know how each of the city's dozens of hospitals and medical facilities are counting their dead. For example, if a

Hospitals Face Little Scrutiny

By ALEX BERENSON December 17, 2006

The drug maker Eli Lilly has engaged in a decade-long effort to play down the health risks of Zyprexa, its best-selling medication for schizophrenia, according to hundreds of internal Lilly documents and e-mail messages among top company managers.

The documents, given to The Times by a lawyer representing mentally ill patients, show that Lilly executives kept important information from doctors about Zyprexa's links to obesity and its tendency to raise blood sugar — both known risk factors for diabetes.

Unless you have control groups there is no way to prove lockdowns worked. Especially since it seems most of the deaths are counting from long term care facilities.

tradewind @akatradewind · 4h
Tegnell (Swedish epidemiologist) states that over 50% of deaths have been in care facilities. He notes even w/out COVID, residents typically only live 6 months. But they see the losses as failure, though not related to lockdown. Sweden's now focused on protecting the vulnerable.

This is amazing. The Lockdowners have been reduced to pointless statistical arguments about counterfactuals.

It's annoying, but I'm thankful that these are the kinds of arguments we're having - a month ago it seemed like apocalypse was genuinely unavoidable.

*not actually clear. Also relevant: I've seen NY officials say that during the peak of the crisis (which we're still close to), they've seen 100 to 175 excess deaths at home. That's not consistent with a spike of 3,000 from all causes, in all places.

Risk of Top Pill

By ALEX BERENSON December 17, 2006

The drug maker Eli Lilly has engaged in a decade-long effort to play down the health risks of Zyprexa, its best-selling medication for schizophrenia, according to hundreds of internal Lilly documents and e-mail messages among top company managers.

The documents, given to The Times by a lawyer representing mentally ill patients, show that Lilly executives kept important information from doctors about Zyprexa's links to obesity and its tendency to raise blood sugar — both known risk factors for diabetes.

A quick update on Florida hospitalizations: two-plus weeks after the state locked down (two weeks late, according to the hysterics) the state has almost exactly the same number of people hospitalized and in ICUs as it did. There was no surge. And there will be no surge.

Meanwhile, the New Jersey health-care system continues to barely hang on, with one of the state's 72 hospitals too full to accept any new patients and two others almost that full.

Wrong. The NYC health commissioner said: "Within the context of the same number of deaths during that period... The number of deaths during that same time period in the previous year. And what we find is that there are roughly 3,000 deaths above what would have been anticipated."

> Adam Nathaniel Peck @adamnpeck
> Surprise! He's wrong. The 3,000 figure that was cited reflects excess non-COVID deaths. That is, deaths due to things like overcrowding in hospitals, lack of ambulances, etc. Factoring in CV-19, we're at about 13,000 more deaths (2.5x) than an average year. twitter.com/alexberenson/s…

These figures are provisional, meaning additional deaths are likely to come in as more cities and states report or update their counts, but the statisticians are aware of the lag and attempt to account for it:

Coronavirus Testing Needs to Triple Before the U.S. Can Reopen, Experts Say from Montreal, Quebec here!

Hi Alex,

You are doing an amazing job navigating this COVID-19 situation. Thank you for that!

I thought you would find this information very helpful and illuminating. The Quebec government actually does a good job of getting timely, accurate and trustworthy information out. From your perspective, I think it is extremely useful since the information isn't politicized like some of the data coming out of U.S. jurisdictions. Also, there is no incentive or profit motive in Canada for hospitals and doctors to skew or falsify the information. Most importantly, there is no anti-Trump or pro-Trump bias baked into the numbers. They are what they are...

It's increasingly clear the focus on widespread testing (as opposed to widespread ANTIBODY testing) is a sideshow designed to delay reopening and take the focus away from the empty hospitals. It's another version of wait two weeks.

From a New York City physician who treats #COVID patients:

I am a surgeon in New York City. I am in private practice and we are essential, but decided to close our practice until Until then I signed up to work at the NYC public hospitals (H+H) taking care of medical/Covid patients. I don't know exactly how deaths are coded, but I can tell you that virtually every single ER admission to the hospitals are "suspected Covid" or "Covid rule out" patients, regardless of their symptoms or the reason for admission. For example, I would say half my patients right now are being ruled out and even treated for Covid, even though their symptoms are not consistent with Covid at all. To give one specific example I currently have a patient who tested negative and has no symptoms of Covid, but is still listed under the "Covid registry" in the chart simply because they were tested. Obviously I am very limited on the amount of information I can give because of patient privacy concerns.

I don't think this is necessarily some conspiracy to overinflate Covid numbers, but I do believe at this time

Hi Alex,

You can certainly use the info, but I prefer you NOT use my name. As for numbers, the inpatient hospital numbers and ER visits are definitely decreasing. On Tuesday our unit had 36 patients, today we have 27. Of those, only 13 are confirmed Covid patients. Of those, 11 were actually admitted because of Covid, which is a higher rate than usual (usually only about 70% of Covid-positive patients are admitted because of Covid). The other non-Covid patients were admitted for other medical reasons not related to Covid, and have either tested negative or their tests are pending.

Thank you! To put it in perspective, is the 43rd largest state in the country (ahead of of Minneapolis, New Orleans, and Honolulu). The county of LA Data showed we had the most confirmed cases, but this data looks promising (I think).

How do you report places that aren't enforcing social distancing? It's simple: just snap a photo and text it to 311-692. #AskMyMayor 1984 and Animal Farm get the attention, but Homage to Catalonia - Orwell's non-fiction on the Spanish Civil War - might be his best.

Wow, did he hate reporters:

3/ I guess one might say that the groupthink and lies Orwell saw in Spain informed his writing in 1984 - which was published in 1949, 11 years after Homage to Catalonia.

Apropos of nothing, of course.

If I asked about it, she would say, "Age is no bargain. No bargain." That was the end of that. Around 2010 she got weaker, but she lived four more years. Here she is with our daughter Lucy. And I don't doubt what Gisa Dollinger would have said about the choices we're making now.

1/ "There are at most 200K ventilators in the US. One million are expected to be needed." This horrifying news comes from my old employer [illegible]; it's sourced to the Society of Critical Care Medicine.

Only the SCCM didn't say that. At all. Let's see what it did say...

> Trip Gabriel @tripgabriel
> There are at most 200k ventilators in the US. One million are expected to be needed. Experts say the Trump administration approach - let states fend for themselves in the market rather than a central authority step in - will doom people to die. nytimes.com/2020/03/25/hea...

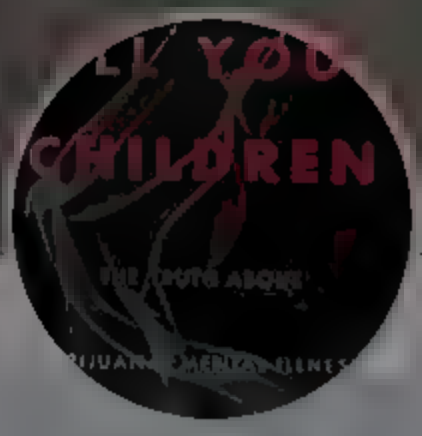
2/ The number comes from a March 19 SCCM paper:

"[One estimate is that 1/2 of] ICU admissions (960,000) would require ventilatory support. Such projections are gross estimates."



More importantly: this is everyone who may need ventilation OVER THE COURSE OF THE EPIDEMIC...

3/ In fact, the paper states explicitly "that U.S. hospitals could absorb a maximum of 26,000 to 56,000 additional ventilators at the peak of a national pandemic, as safe use of ventilators requires trained personnel."

4/ In other words, whatever happens with COVID, if we built a million new ventilators, 950,000 would be furniture.

Added bonus: the paper reports the US already has far more critical care beds per-capita than other nations: 35 per 100,000, compared to 12 in Italy, 7 in the UK...

6/ Final point: the paper concludes the real bottleneck is in trained staff and "priority should focus not only on increasing [ventilators]... but on growing the number of trained professionals."

But I guess bashing the WH for not nationalizing ventilator production is more fun.

The @IHME_UW model vs reality for New York State, April 5. The model is less accurate than ever. 69K beds projected, 16.5K actually needed; 12,346 ICU beds projected, 4376 needed. Even better (tho not for the model), overall bed count rose less than 600 statewide - less than 4%.

The hysteria will remain, and probably find its way into the history books as truth.

The main problem with that chart is that it divides flu deaths into a seriously distorted denominator. Need to wait for the data to season.

For sure deaths are being up-coded to COVID-19. But we also probably missed a ton of COVID-19 deaths before testing was widespread.

But then why has all-cause mortality been down in the U.K.(until very recently) and US (based on provisional data) this year?

The entire northern hemisphere had a crazy mild season for flu deaths (though I'm told lots of hospitalizations).

I suspect COVID-19 is the forest fire clearing out the accumulated tinder.

A clear example of mortality displacement. COVID in Spain is the example used on Wikipedia (for now): [illegible]

The fact that this tweet is considered anything but obvious and non-controversial tells you whatever you need to know about how badly the media has panicked people and how little it cares about facts.

Farms can't move product bc processors aren't buying. Food processors are either shut down or running limited operations. Back of stores are empty, so no margin in store.

Logistics are keeping us afloat right now, but what happens when there's no product to move?

I've noticed in the last few days that the drive-through lines for fast food, Starbucks, etc, have reached crazy levels. I don't think that's about shortages, though. I think people are desperate to get out of their houses and have face-to-face contact, even through a car window.

Hi Alex,

I'm a reporter with VICE and I'm interested in doing a Q&A with you about your coronavirus work. Your positions on COVID and COVID guidelines have certainly struck a nerve with many people and I think a straightforward Q&A--where you can lay out where and how media has biffed coverage of the coronavirus and I can ask you follow up questions about it--would be legitimately useful for our readers. I'm envisioning a fairly free-flowing discussion which I would then transcribe for publication.

Is this something you'd be interested in?

you don't do it Chotiner-style and annotate or second-guess me after I have answered (in other words, it would have to be the equivalent of a live on-air interview). You ask, I answer, that's the end of it

Alex,

Thanks, I appreciate your time, and agree to run the Q&A verbatim. The questions are:

What is happening with the COVID crisis, in your view?

What is the media getting wrong about the coronavirus crisis?

When and why did you personally start to doubt the official narrative of the COVID crisis?

What is your medical and public health background?

How do you answer people who say that the earliest, most dire projections of COVID's impact have been avoided

1/ So on Monday, @laurawags of @vice asked me for an interview, and I agreed, under certain very specifuc conditions. Let's see what happened next. Note: Laura and I have never spoken by phone - this email thread is the entirety of our communication:

Laura Wagner

Hi Alex,

I'm a reporter with VICE and I'm interested in doing a Q&A with you about your coronavirus work. Your positions on COVID and COVID guidelines have certainly struck a nerve with many people and I think a straightforward Q&A--where you can lay out where and how media has lifted coverage of the coronavirus and I can ask you follow up questions about it--would be legitimately useful for our readers. I'm envisioning a fairly free-flowing discussion which I would then transcribe for publication.

Is this something you'd be interested in?

Alex Berenson

I'm very short on time. If you want to ask questions over email I will try to answer them, but only on the condition you don't do it Chatbler-style and annotate or second-guess me after I have answered (in other words, it would have to be the equivalent of a live on-air interview). You ask, I answer, that's the end of it

One other point - we were told the initial point of the lockdowns was to 'flatten the curve' - to reduce the strain on the health-care system. Hospitalizations are the key metric of that standard too. And by all evidence, the health-care system in the US is not under strain. In fact, that's not quite true - it is under strain, but from lack of use. Hospitals are laying people off and in some cases closing because they are so empty. They have canceled elective surgeries and discharged patients to prepare for a 'surge' that has not happened. This fact alone should make anyone question the general pandemic narrative.

What is happening with the COVID crisis, in your view?

Although SARS-2-COV is a real virus that appears to pose a serious threat to the elderly and some people with chronic conditions, we have increasing evidence that its risks have been overstated - certainly to the general population under 50 and especially to anyone under 30, and that the draconian lockdowns we have undertaken may have economic, educational, and

The @[redacted] model vs reality for New York State, April 5. The model is less accurate than ever. 69K beds projected, 16.5K actually needed; 12,346 ICU beds projected, 4376 needed. Even better (tho not for the model), overall bed count rose less than 600 statewide - less than 4%.

2/ This is likely to unwind fast now. We will all be told how wonderful it is that we've dodged a bullet, that the lockdowns worked. (But how we need them just a few weeks longer!) And there will every effort to count every [illegible] death, to get the number as high as possible...

Update:

The City of Jacksonville is partially reopening beaches and city parks being Friday afternoon at 5. Mayor Lenny Curry

"This could be the beginning back to normal life." Curry says.

The beaches will only be open from 6AM until 11AM then again from 5PM until 8PM. Meanwhile, the parks will reopen during normal hours from dawn until dusk, but Curry says public gathering spaces like pavilions and picnic areas will still be closed. He says social distancing guidelines should still be followed.

Great, a new made-up chart and metric from friends of the folks who brought you @IHME_UW. Why is 500,000 tests daily the magic number? Why not 5 million, or 100,000? The numbers that matter are hospitalizations (now ~flat) and the true IFR, which we can tell from PAST infections.

One other key point - about 190,000 Americans over 85 have died this year, and 345,000 over 75. Many of those died from respiratory illness or pneumonia. Thus, depending on how loose the criteria becomes for #COVID probable deaths, the #COVID numbers can get very big very fast.

4/ Ferguson now predicts that the epidemic in the U.K. will peak and subside within "two to three weeks" - last week's paper said 18+ months of quarantine would be necessary.

Alex Berenson
@AlexBerenson

5/ One last point here: Ferguson gives the lockdown credit, which is interesting - the UK only began ita lockdown 2 days ago, and the theory is that lockdowns take 2 weeks or more to work.

6/ Not surprisingly, this testimony has received no attention in the US - I found it only in UK papers. Team Apocalypse is not interested.

Because we know he's wrong... look at italy. Look at spain. The humans in those countries are not unique. it took china 2 full months of total totalitarian style lockdown to get down to levels where even their government that tried to cover this up is starting to reopen.

Back to Florida: 20 million people, 27,000 empty hospital beds - and a total of 85 new #COVID hospitalizations today (down for the fourth day in a row) 800 new positive tests, the lowest in a week. Hey @gorskon - I thought evidence mattered to you. Was I wrong?

1/ Hey, at least @neil_ferguson is consistent. Here he is in 2005 predicting that bird flu might kill 200 million people. Yes, 200 MILLION. As in 200,000,000.

(Spoiler alert: it didn't.)

By that standard last month's paper was spot on!

Speaking of HIV - this is not the first time well-meaning experts have vastly overstated a disease threat.

"Nearly 100 million people worldwide could die from AIDS by the end of the century if a cure or vaccine is not found, [the Surgeon General said]."

I don't remember us shutting the world economy or our society in response to the threat of 100 million HIV deaths, though. Maybe I missed it?

In a normal investigative reporting world the biggest question being chased right now might be how the guy who predicted "mad sheep" and nine-figure bird flu deaths and whose model depends on 13-year-old code he hasn't released somehow has the ear of the world's governments.

But hey, [illegible] says everybody loves his code! And he's not biased at all!

(Actually he didn't even say that, he said the people he'd allowed to see it were "largely positive." Oh. Talk about a ringing endorsement.)

And Miami/Dade reports a 6% antibody infection rate, 165,000 cases. The 15x active infection figure in the article is an understatement - the tests took two weeks to carry out. Miami/Dade has under 300 deaths, a ~0.2% death rate (noticing a trend)?

Professor Ferguson now says there is no difference between last week's model and what he said yesterday. I would urge folks to read the initial paper - available here imperial.ac.uk/media/imperial … - and yesterday's comments and decide for themselves.

You mean, when he suggested this strategy: "We show that in the UK and US context, suppression will minimally require a combination of social distancing of the entire population, home isolation of cases and household quarantine of their family members."

For 18 months! (Or potentially even longer, until a vaccine was created.) And even so the paper ended by saying "it is not at all certain that suppression will succeed long term." Like I said, people should read and judge for themselves.

1/ @IHME_UW appears to have updated its model: It has cut the number of hospital beds needed for #COVID patients on the peak of April by 45% - from 262,000 to 141,000 and ICU beds by 26% - from almost 39,700 to 29,200. Yet deaths remain almost the same, around 80,000...

2/ Unfortunately, though the model updated just now, its projections remain inaccurate for actual use TODAY: for example, it predicts New York state on April 5 will need 24,000 beds and 6,000 ICU beds, about 1/3 more than the actual usage today. Not sure what to say about this...

An incredible chart: three countries had earlier and more effective “social distancing” than any others: France, Italy, and Spain - the three countries with the WORST epidemics. Wonder why. (Maybe because most transmission is intrafamilial and nosocomial? Just spitballing here.)

Excellent news! British Prime Minister Boris Johnson is out of the ICU after three days and feeling better. Not unexpected, given his age, but good to see anyway.

3/ In fact, the paper states explicitly "that U.S. hospitals could absorb a maximum of 26,000 to 56,000 additional ventilators at the peak of a national pandemic, as safe use of ventilators requires trained personnel."

4/ In other words, whatever happens with COVID, if we built a million new ventilators, 950,000 would be furniture.

Added bonus: the paper reports the US already has far more critical care beds per-capita than other nations: 35 per 100,000, compared to 12 in Italy, 7 in the UK...

5/ Here's a link to the paper (thoughtfully provided by the Times) so you can read and judge it for yourself.

I don't understand the point of trying to drive panic with stories that are so misleading - and, frankly, so easily checked.

At first this might seem funny - rich folks don't get to golf! It's not. There is ~ZERO evidence these outdoor activities spread the virus. Thus for essentially no reason, the gov't is destroying businesses and banning private activities. First they came for the golfers...

> Hi Alex,

You can't walk on them even far away from other people, much less play golf. The order extends far beyond golf courses and will be enforced by police, etc.

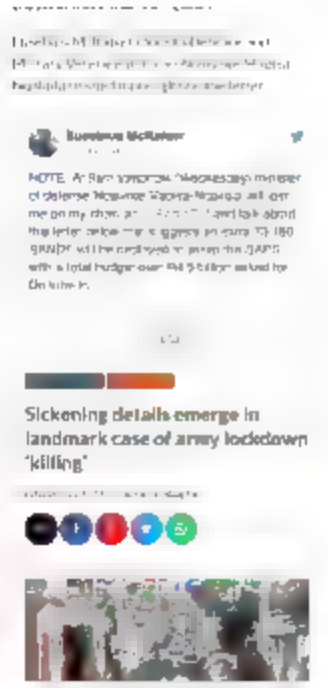
1/ In the last day I have started to get disturbing emails from South Africa, where the president has now directed the army to put 75,000 soldiers in the streets to enforce the lockdown. News articles back them. 58 South Africans have died of #COVID, or 1 in 1 million...

Hello Alex,



The world needs to know what is happening in South Africa.

We have been in lockdown for 26 days.

People are starving in our townships. Mass arrests. Army and police have killed people. Liquor and tobacco and hot food from grocery stores banned.

And now the full army has just been deployed to monitor citizens - 75 000 troops at the cost of R5 billion.

Our official stats predict half of all business will close. And the best compensation our government can give is R350 per month to the unemployed - miniscule. Plus there are reports of politicians stealing food parcels.

I don't understand the point of trying to drive panic with stories that are so misleading - and, frankly, so easily checked.

1/ "There are at most 200K ventilators in the US. One million are expected to be needed." This horrifying news comes from my old employer @nytimes; it's sourced to the Society of Critical Care Medicine.

Only the SCCM didn't say that. At all. Let's see what it did say...

There are at most 200k ventilators in the US. One million are expected to be needed. Experts say the Trump administration approach - let states fend for themselves in the market rather than a central authority step in - will doom people to die. nytimes.com/2020/03/25/hea...

An incredible chart: three countries had earlier and more effective “social distancing” than any others: France, Italy, and Spain - the three countries with the WORST epidemics. Wonder why. (Maybe because most transmission is intrafamilial and nosocomial? Just spitballing here.)

1/ This email came from a German reader. To summarize: on April 15 the official German public health/disease control institute published a paper showing that moderate social distancing reduced #SARS_CoV2 spread but the hard lockdown was useless.

2/ Of note, the paper assumes a reproduction cycle of 4 days. Thus the epidemic can spread fast - and will be hugely sensitive to changes in R (how many people 1 infected person infects in turn). At an R of 3.1 with a cycle of 4 days, 1 infection will become 10,000 in a month!

1/ "There are at most 200K ventilators in the US. One million are expected to be needed." This horrifying news comes from my old employer @nytimes; it's sourced to the Society of Critical Care Medicine.

Only the SCCM didn't say that. At all. Let's see what it did say...

More importantly: this is everyone who may need ventilation OVER THE COURSE OF THE EPIDEMIC...

You mean, when he suggested this strategy: "We show that in the UK and US context, suppression will minimally require a combination of social distancing of the entire population, home isolation of cases and household quarantine of their family members."

For 18 months! (Or potentially even longer, until a vaccine was created.) And even so the paper ended by saying "it is not at all certain that suppression will succeed long term." Like I said, people should read and judge for themselves.

At first this might seem funny - rich folks don't get to golf! It's not. There is ~ZERO evidence these outdoor activities spread the virus. Thus for essentially no reason, the gov't is destroying businesses and banning private activities. First they came for the golfers...

> Hi Alex,
> I follow you on Twitter.

> Our county in Southern California, Riverside County, has just sent out orders that all golf courses, including private courses, will be shut down until June 10th to June 30th. You can't walk on them even far away from other people, much less play golf. The order extends far beyond golf courses and will be enforced by police, etc.
> This is so outrageous. Is anyone doing anything to organize against these blatantly anti-Constitutional acts?
> I called the local Republican party and they agree with these orders.
> This is so wrong.....

An incredible chart: three countries had earlier and more effective “social distancing” than any others: France, Italy, and Spain - the three countries with the WORST epidemics. Wonder why. (Maybe because most transmission is intrafamilial and nosocomial? Just spitballing here.)

Fair. I still believe in some form we are looking at numerous repeated outbreaks until a vaccine is developed. Here in the U.S. we're struggling with "clusters." It's the speed that's deadly, not overall mortality rate. "Excess deaths" will tell a diff tale.Overwhelming cities

1/ So I think this is a really excellent, non-hysterical thread on the real potential dangers of #COVID - @JDVance1 is smart and thoughtful - and it highlights yet again why we must have widespread serological testing as soon as possible.

3/ And while acknowledging the economic crisis, Vance more or less throws up his hands, saying that it would have happened anyway. But the difference between voluntary social distancing and what we have now is the distance between recession and depression. That's no exaggeration.

3/ In fact, the paper states explicitly "that U.S. hospitals could absorb a maximum of 26,000 to 56,000 additional ventilators at the peak of a national pandemic, as safe use of ventilators requires trained personnel."

4/ In other words, whatever happens with COVID, if we built a million new ventilators, 950,000 would be furniture.

Added bonus: the paper reports the US already has far more critical care beds per-capita than other nations: 35 per 100,000, compared to 12 in Italy, 7 in the UK...

I don't understand the point of trying to drive panic with stories that are so misleading - and, frankly, so easily checked.

At first this might seem funny - rich folks don't get to golf! It's not. There is ~ZERO evidence these outdoor activities spread the virus. Thus for essentially no reason, the gov't is destroying businesses and banning private activities. First they came for the golfers...

> Hi Alex,
> I follow you on Twitter.
> Our county in Southern California, Riverside County, has just sent out orders that all golf courses, including private courses, will be shut down until June 10th to June 30th. You can't walk on them even far away from other people, much less play golf. The order extends far beyond golf courses and will be enforced by police, etc.
> This is so outrageous. Is anyone doing anything to organize against these blatantly anti-Constitutional acts?
> I called the local Republican party and they agree with these orders.

3/ And while acknowledging the economic crisis, Vance more or less throws up his hands, saying that it would have happened anyway. But the difference between voluntary social distancing and what we have now is the distance between recession and depression. That's no exaggeration.

Fair. I still believe in some form we are looking at numerous repeated outbreaks until a vaccine is developed. Here in the U.S. we're struggling with "clusters." It's the speed that's deadly, not overall mortality rate. "Excess deaths" will tell a diff tale.Overwhelming cities

1/ @IHME_UW appears to have updated its model: It has cut the number of hospital beds needed for #COVID patients on the peak of April by 45% - from 262,000 to 141,000 and ICU beds by 26% - from almost 39,700 to 29,200. Yet deaths remain almost the same, around 80,000...

2/ Unfortunately, though the model updated just now, its projections remain inaccurate for actual use TODAY: for example, it predicts New York state on April 5 will need 24,000 beds and 6,000 ICU beds, about 1/3 more than the actual usage today. Not sure what to say about this...

3/ Except that a model that cannot get the facts right at its ACTUAL TIME OF RELEASE may be less than reliable going forward.

1/ So I think this is a really excellent, non-hysterical thread on the real potential dangers of #COVID - @JDVance1 is smart and thoughtful - and it highlights yet again why we must have widespread serological testing as soon as possible.

2/ I would make a couple of points - it glides over just how concentrated the excess mortality risk appears to be in the very old and sick.Why isn't our focus on protecting THOSE folks rather than going immediately to lockdowns - which are hugely destructive by any measure?

3/ And while acknowledging the economic crisis, Vance more or less throws up his hands, saying that it would have happened anyway. But the difference between voluntary social distancing and what we have now is the distance between recession and depression. That's no exaggeration.

3/ In fact, the paper states explicitly "that U.S. hospitals could absorb a maximum of 26,000 to 56,000 additional ventilators at the peak of a national pandemic, as safe use of ventilators requires trained personnel."

4/ In other words, whatever happens with COVID, if we built a million new ventilators, 950,000 would be furniture.

Added bonus: the paper reports the US already has far more critical care beds per-capita than other nations: 35 per 100,000, compared to 12 in Italy, 7 in the UK...

I don't understand the point of trying to drive panic with stories that are so misleading - and, frankly, so easily checked.

Professor Ferguson now says there is no difference between last week's model and what he said yesterday. I would urge folks to read the initial paper - available here imperial.ac.uk/media/imperial … - and yesterday's comments and decide for themselves.

You mean, when he suggested this strategy: "We show that in the UK and US context, suppression will minimally require a combination of social distancing of the entire population, home isolation of cases and household quarantine of their family members."

For 18 months! (Or potentially even longer, until a vaccine was created.) And even so the paper ended by saying "it is not at all certain that suppression will succeed long term." Like I said, people should read and judge for themselves.

Fair. I still believe in some form we are looking at numerous repeated outbreaks until a vaccine is developed. Here in the U.S. we're struggling with "clusters." It's the speed that's deadly, not overall mortality rate. "Excess deaths" will tell a diff tale.Overwhelming cities

At first this might seem funny - rich folks don't get to golf! It's not. There is ~ZERO evidence these outdoor activities spread the virus. Thus for essentially no reason, the gov't is destroying businesses and banning private activities. First they came for the golfers...

> Hi Alex,
> I follow you on Twitter.
> Our county in Southern California, Riverside County, has just sent out orders that all golf courses, including private courses, will be shut down until June 10th to June 30th. You can't walk on them even far away from other people, much less play golf. The order extends far beyond golf courses and will be enforced by police, etc.
>
> This is so outrageous. Is anyone doing anything to organize against these blatantly anti-Constitutional acts?
> I called the local Republican party and they agree with these orders.
> This is so wrong.....

Incredible op-ed piece from the chairman of the emergency medicine department at St. Barnabas Hospital in the Bronx, calling for the end of the lockdowns even in New York. (And why is @nypost the only place running these?)

> Hi Alex,
> I follow you on Twitter.

> Our county in Southern California, Riverside County, has just sent out orders that all golf courses, including private courses, will be shut down until June 10th to June 30th. You can't walk on them even far away from other people, much less play golf. The order extends far beyond golf courses and will be enforced by police, etc.
> This is so outrageous. Is anyone doing anything to organize against these blatantly anti-Constitutional acts?
> I called the local Republican party and they agree with these orders.

1/ From a physician in Michigan - his testing site is running at less than half its daily capacity (and two other nearby sites have closed). THERE IS NOT EVEN ENOUGN DEMAND FOR CURRENT TESTS BECAUSE SO FEW PEOPLE ARE SYMPTOMATIC.

Hi Alex,

In the before time, at the long long ago, I was a pediatrician in Wayne County, Michigan. Since mid-March our clinic has been operating at a small fraction of normal, staff have been furloughed, and docs are working probably 20-30% of the time. Early on our parent company set up a drive through test site and was looking for volunteers. I volunteered because clinic is just depressing. Initially we were set up to test 90 pre-screened people per day, and we quickly expanded to three sites. Within 2 weeks we had closed down the other two sites and we've just been operating just the one for about the last 3 weeks. We never do 90/day anymore; we probably average about 40-50 and we've had several days with 10-20. During this time we have been progressively expanding our criteria so more people could get tested. Early on you needed cough AND fever AND confirmed contact. Now it's any one symptom OR contact (and symptoms have been broadened to things like blisters and diarrhea). We also do asymptomatic testing

We have swabs, tubes, and PPE. What we don't have is patients! My colleagues are confused. We suspect that symptomatic people are dwindling because we've been under house arrest for a month. Great. But when I keep reading that we need to "test more" BEFORE we can reopen (I just don't know what that means. If contact tracing is feasible (I am not optimistic), we need to reopen and then be ready to test. Testing random asymptomatic or minimally symptomatic people now seems like a waste of time and resources. Who am I helping by telling a young adult with sniffles that he has Covid19, so he should stay home. Like he has been doing for a month and is under orders to continue at least another 3 weeks. An incredible chart: three countries had earlier and more effective “social distancing” than any others: France, Italy, and Spain - the three countries with the WORST epidemics. Wonder why. (Maybe because most transmission is intrafamilial and nosocomial? Just spitballing here.)

1/ So I think this is a really excellent, non-hysterical thread on the real potential dangers of #COVID - @JDVance1 is smart and thoughtful - and it highlights yet again why we must have widespread serological testing as soon as possible.

@JDVance1 J.D. Vance
I've been reading a lot of the contrarian (primarily from fellow righties) COVID19 opinions, and I wanted to work through them in good faith. I find most of them pretty unpersuasive. As they say, THREAD:

2/ I would make a couple of points - it glides over just how concentrated the excess mortality risk appears to be in the very old and sick.Why isn't our focus on protecting THOSE folks rather than going immediately to lockdowns - which are hugely destructive by any measure?

192 22 13

@AlexBerenson · 8 اپریل Alex Berenson
3/ And while acknowledging the economic crisis, Vance more or less throws up his hands, saying that it would have happened anyway. But the difference between voluntary social distancing and what we have now is the distance between recession and depression. That's no exaggeration.

Fair. I still believe in some form we are looking at numerous repeated outbreaks until a vaccine is developed. Here in the U.S. we're struggling with "clusters." It's the speed that's deadly, not overall mortality rate. "Excess deaths" will tell a diff tale.Overwhelming cities

At first this might seem funny - rich folks don't get to golf! It's not. There is ~ZERO evidence these outdoor activities spread the virus. Thus for essentially no reason, the gov't is destroying businesses and banning private activities. First they came for the golfers...

> Hi Alex,
> I follow you on Twitter.
> Our county in Southern California, Riverside County, has just sent out orders that all golf courses, including private courses, will be shut down until June 10th to June 30th. You can't walk on them even far away from other people, much less play golf. The order extends far beyond golf courses and will be enforced by police, etc.
>
> This is so outrageous. Is anyone doing anything to organize against these blatantly anti-Constitutional acts?
> I called the local Republican party and they agree with these orders.

You mean, when he suggested this strategy: "We show that in the UK and US context, suppression will minimally require a combination of social distancing of the entire population, home isolation of cases and household quarantine of their family members."

For 18 months! (Or potentially even longer, until a vaccine was created.) And even so the paper ended by saying "it is not at all certain that suppression will succeed long term." Like I said, people should read and judge for themselves.

At first this might seem funny - rich folks don't get to golf! It's not. There is ~ZERO evidence these outdoor activities spread the virus. Thus for essentially no reason, the gov't is destroying businesses and banning private activities. First they came for the golfers...

> Hi Alex,
> I follow you on Twitter.

> Our county in Southern California, Riverside County, has just sent out orders that all golf courses, including private courses, will be shut down until June 10th to June 30th. You can't walk on them even far away from other people, much less play golf. The order extends far beyond golf courses and will be enforced by police, etc.
> This is so outrageous. Is anyone doing anything to organize against these blatantly anti-Constitutional acts?
> I called the local Republican party and they agree with these orders.

A sweet little piece of panic porn here from @cnn, just as @govkemp denies his media masters and opens his state. And of course jt's based on a model. Let's forget the model and look at ACTUAL Georgia data, shall we?

3/ In fact, the paper states explicitly "that U.S. hospitals could absorb a maximum of 26,000 to 56,000 additional ventilators at the peak of a national pandemic, as safe use of ventilators requires trained personnel."

4 201 530

Alex Berenson
@AlexBerenson

4/ In other words, whatever happens with COVID, if we built a million new ventilators, 950,000 would be furniture.

Added bonus: the paper reports the US already has far more critical care beds per-capita than other nations: 35 per 100,000, compared to 12 in Italy, 7 in the UK...

5/ Here's a link to the paper (thoughtfully provided by the Times) so you can read and judge it for yourself.

I don't understand the point of trying to drive panic with stories that are so misleading - and, frankly, so easily checked.

Excellent news! British Prime Minister Boris Johnson is out of the ICU after three days and feeling better. Not unexpected, given his age, but good to see anyway.

Fair. I still believe in some form we are looking at numerous repeated outbreaks until a vaccine is developed. Here in the U.S. we're struggling with "clusters." It's the speed that's deadly, not overall mortality rate. "Excess deaths" will tell a diff tale.Overwhelming cities

2/ Unfortunately, though the model updated just now, its projections remain inaccurate for actual use TODAY: for example, it predicts New York state on April 5 will need 24,000 beds and 6,000 ICU beds, about 1/3 more than the actual usage today. Not sure what to say about this...

At first this might seem funny - rich folks don't get to golf! It's not. There is ~ZERO evidence these outdoor activities spread the virus. Thus for essentially no reason, the gov't is destroying businesses and banning private activities. First they came for the golfers...

> Hi Alex,
> I follow you on Twitter.

> Our county in Southern California, Riverside County, has just sent out orders that all golf courses, including private courses, will be shut down until June 10th to June 30th. You can't walk on them even far away from other people, much less play golf. The order extends far beyond golf courses and will be enforced by police, etc.
> This is so outrageous. Is anyone doing anything to organize against these blatantly anti-Constitutional acts?
> I called the local Republican party and they agree with these orders.
> This is so wrong.....

An incredible chart: three countries had earlier and more effective “social distancing” than any others: France, Italy, and Spain - the three countries with the WORST epidemics. Wonder why. (Maybe because most transmission is intrafamilial and nosocomial? Just spitballing here.)

For 18 months! (Or potentially even longer, until a vaccine was created.) And even so the paper ended by saying “it is not at all certain that suppression will succeed long term.” Like I said, people should read and judge for themselves.

Fair. I still believe in some form we are looking at numerous repeated outbreaks until a vaccine is developed. Here in the U.S. we're struggling with "clusters." It's the speed that's deadly, not overall mortality rate. "Excess deaths" will tell a diff tale.Overwhelming cities

1/ This is a remarkable turn from Neil Ferguson, who led the [illegible] authors who warned of 500,000 UK deaths - and who has now himself tested positive for [illegible];

Alex Berenson
@AlexBerenson

2/ He now says both that the U.K. should have enough ICU beds and that the coronavirus will probably kill under 20,000 people in the U.K. - more than 1/2 of whom would have died by the end of the year in any case bc they were so old and sick.

4/ Ferguson now predicts that the epidemic in the U.K. will peak and subside

1/ @IHME_UW appears to have updated its model: It has cut the number of hospital beds needed for #COVID patients on the peak of April by 45% - from 262,000 to 141,000 and ICU beds by 26% - from almost 39,700 to 29,200. Yet deaths remain almost the same, around 80,000...

2/ Unfortunately, though the model updated just now, its projections remain inaccurate for actual use TODAY: for example, it predicts New York state on April 5 will need 24,000 beds and 6,000 ICU beds, about 1/3 more than the actual usage today. Not sure what to say about this...

3/ And while acknowledging the economic crisis, Vance more or less throws up his hands, saying that it would have happened anyway. But the difference between voluntary social distancing and what we have now is the distance between recession and depression. That's no exaggeration.

Incredible data from Oregon suggesting much of the recent rise in all-cause mortality is lockdown rather than #Covid related - that people may simply be dying at home because they are too frightened to go to hospitals and failing to get medical treatment for other conditions.

At first this might seem funny - rich folks don't get to golf! It's not. There is ~ZERO evidence these outdoor activities spread the virus. Thus for essentially no reason, the gov't is destroying businesses and banning private activities. First they came for the golfers...

> Hi Alex,

You can't walk on them even far away from other people, much less play golf. The order extends far beyond golf courses and will be enforced by police, etc.
> This is so outrageous. Is anyone doing anything to organize against these blatantly anti-Constitutional acts?

An incredible chart: three countries had earlier and more effective “social distancing” than any others: France, Italy, and Spain - the three countries with the WORST epidemics. Wonder why. (Maybe because most transmission is intrafamilial and nosocomial? Just spitballing here.)

3/ In fact, the paper states explicitly "that U.S. hospitals could absorb a maximum of 26,000 to 56,000 additional ventilators at the peak of a national pandemic, as safe use of ventilators requires trained personnel."

4/ In other words, whatever happens with COVID, if we built a million new ventilators, 950,000 would be furniture.

Added bonus: the paper reports the US already has far more critical care beds per-capita than other nations: 35 per 100,000, compared to 12 in Italy, 7 in the UK...

2/ Peaks occur in May or June; and the strategy is assumed to run for at LEAST three months. I don't know what to say to anyone who does not see this forecast as very different than what Professor Ferguson said yesterday...

1/ @IHME_UW appears to have updated its model: It has cut the number of hospital beds needed for #COVID patients on the peak of April by 45% - from 262,000 to 141,000 and ICU beds by 26% - from almost 39,700 to 29,200. Yet deaths remain almost the same, around 80,000...

An incredible chart: three countries had earlier and more effective “social distancing” than any others: France, Italy, and Spain - the three countries with the WORST epidemics. Wonder why. (Maybe because most transmission is intrafamilial and nosocomial? Just spitballing here.)

Meanwhile, the reality-based nation of Switzerland says children “don’t transmit the coronavirus.” Which I guess means the schools should stay closed forever?

1/ This is a remarkable turn from Neil Ferguson, who led the [redacted] authors who warned of 500,000 UK deaths - and who has now himself tested positive for [redacted];

Alex Berenson
@AlexBerenson

2/ He now says both that the U.K. should have enough ICU beds and that the coronavirus will probably kill under 20,000 people in the U.K. - more than 1/2 of whom would have died by the end of the year in any case bc they were so old and sick.

3/ Essentially, what has happened is that estimates of the viruses transmissibility have increased - which implies that many more people have already gotten it than we realize - which in turn implies it is less dangerous.

Alex Berenson @AlexBerenson · 26 thg 3

4/ Ferguson now predicts that the epidemic in the U.K. will peak and subside

At first this might seem funny - rich folks don't get to golf! It's not. There is ~ZERO evidence these outdoor activities spread the virus. Thus for essentially no reason, the gov't is destroying businesses and banning private activities. First they came for the golfers...

> Hi Alex,
> I follow you on Twitter.
> Our county in Southern California, Riverside County, has just sent out orders that all golf courses, including private courses, will be shut down until June 10th to June 30th. You can't walk on them even far away from other people, much less play golf. The order extends far beyond golf courses and will be enforced by police, etc.
>
> This is so outrageous. Is anyone doing anything to organize against these blatantly anti-Constitutional acts?
> I called the local Republican party and they agree with these orders.
> This is so wrong.....

1/ So I think this is a really excellent, non-hysterical thread on the real potential dangers of #COVID - @JDVance1 is smart and thoughtful - and it highlights yet again why we must have widespread serological testing as soon as possible.

> J.D. Vance ✓ @JDVance1

2/ I would make a couple of points - it glides over just how concentrated the excess mortality risk appears to be in the very old and sick.Why isn't our focus on protecting THOSE folks rather than going immediately to lockdowns - which are hugely destructive by any measure?

3/ And while acknowledging the economic crisis, Vance more or less throws up his hands, saying that it would have happened anyway. But the difference between voluntary social distancing and what we have now is the distance between recession and depression. That's no exaggeration.

4/ In other words, whatever happens with COVID, if we built a million new ventilators, 950,000 would be furniture.

Added bonus: the paper reports the US already has far more critical care beds per-capita than other nations: 35 per 100,000, compared to 12 in Italy, 7 in the UK...

I don't understand the point of trying to drive panic with stories that are so misleading - and, frankly, so easily checked.

For 18 months! (Or potentially even longer, until a vaccine was created.) And even so the paper ended by saying "it is not at all certain that suppression will succeed long term." Like I said, people should read and judge for themselves.

1/ Okay - I promised an answer, so here goes, quickly.

For several reasons it is not true that "COVID-19 has killed more Americans in six weeks than the flu does in a year." First off, on the most basic level, the flu kills as many as 60,000+ people in some years.

2/ The six weeks v. year comparison is also misleading. Flu season is 17-20 weeks, with short in-season peaks. Also, we are coding COVID deaths aggressively, and most people who die are elderly and ill. Knowing how many people died WITH rather than OF COVID is impossible for now.

4/ In other words, whatever happens with COVID, if we built a million new ventilators, 950,000 would be furniture.

Added bonus: the paper reports the US already has far more critical care beds per-capita than other nations: 35 per 100,000, compared to 12 in Italy, 7 in the UK...

Fair. I still believe in some form we are looking at numerous repeated outbreaks until a vaccine is developed. Here in the U.S. we're struggling with "clusters." It's the speed that's deadly, not overall mortality rate. "Excess deaths" will tell a diff tale.Overwhelming cities

1/ @IHME_UW appears to have updated its model: It has cut the number of hospital beds needed for #COVID patients on the peak of April by 45% - from 262,000 to 141,000 and ICU beds by 26% - from almost 39,700 to 29,200. Yet deaths remain almost the same, around 80,000...

An incredible chart: three countries had earlier and more effective “social distancing” than any others: France, Italy, and Spain - the three countries with the WORST epidemics. Wonder why. (Maybe because most transmission is intrafamilial and nosocomial? Just spitballing here.)

…n therefore population-wide social distancing combined with home isolation of cases and school and university closure.

To avoid a rebound in transmission, these policies will need to be maintained until large stocks of vaccine are available to immunise the population – which could be 18 months or more. Adaptive hospital surveillance-based triggers for switching on and off population-wide social distancing and school closure offer greater robustness to uncertainty than fixed duration interventions and can be adapted for regional use (e.g. at the state level in the US). Given local epidemics are not perfectly synchronised, local policies are also more efficient and can achieve comparable levels of suppression to national policies while being in force for a slightly smaller proportion of the time. However, we estimate that for a national GB policy, social distancing would need to be in force for at least 2/3 of the time (for $R_0 \geq 4$, see Table 4) until a vaccine was available.

However, there are very large uncertainties around the transmission of this virus, the likely effectiveness of different policies and the extent to which the population spontaneously adopts risk reducing behaviours. This means it is difficult to be definitive about the likely initial duration of measures which will be required, except that it will be several months. Future decisions on when and for how long to relax policies will need to be informed by ongoing surveillance.

The measures used to achieve suppression might also evolve over time. As case numbers fall, it becomes more feasible to adopt intensive testing, contact tracing and quarantine measures also to

NVSS National Vital Statistics System

COVID-19 Alert No. 2
March 24, 2020

New ICD code introduced for COVID-19 deaths
This email is to alert you that a newly-introduced ICD code has been implemented to accurately capture mortality data for Coronavirus Disease 2019 (COVID-19) on death certificates.

Please read carefully and forward this email to the state statistical staff in your office who are involved in the preparation of mortality data, as well as others who may receive questions when the data are released.

What is the new code?
The new ICD code for Coronavirus Disease 2019 (COVID-19) is U07.1, and below is how it will appear in formal tabular list format.

U07.1 COVID-19
Excludes: Coronavirus infection, unspecified site (B34.2)
Severe acute respiratory syndrome [SARS], unspecified (U04.9)

The WHO has provided a second code, U07.2, for clinical or epidemiological diagnosis of COVID-19 where a laboratory confirmation is inconclusive or not available. Because laboratory test results are not typically reported on death certificates in the U.S., NCHS is not planning to implement U07.2 for mortality statistics.

When will it be implemented?
Immediately.

Will COVID-19 be the underlying cause?
The underlying cause depends upon what and where conditions are reported on the death certificate. However, the rules for coding and selection of the underlying cause of death are expected to result in COVID-19 being the underlying cause more often than not.

What happens if certifiers report terms other than the suggested terms?
If a death certificate reports coronavirus without identifying a specific strain or explicitly specifying that it is not COVID-19, NCHS will ask the states to follow up to verify whether or not the coronavirus was COVID-19.

Lolcatz. What does this even mean? The testing centers are empty and anyone who wants a test and has any reason to have one can. The hospitals are half-empty and going broke. The testing fetish is so obviously a way to delay reopening it barely requires further discussion.

Josh Marshall @joshtpm
Director of Harvard Global Health Institute: "I think most Americans need to know the reason we are shutdown, our economy is shutdown is because we've had inadequate testing."

Yet, weirdly, not one of them made it into that error-filled hit piece of his (for example, I never hung out with cops and/or law enforcement after work, though prosecutors did contact me a few times to follow up on investigations I'd done).

The death toll from COVID-19 reached 286 in Minnesota on Monday, but 223 involved long-term care facilities residents — who remain at greatest risk from the coronavirus infection due to age and existing

From a physician in Indiana who has signed and reviewed death certificates for almost 50 years: “doctors are using death by COVID-19 as a convenient diagnosis...”

Cause of death fallacy

Lee A. Fischer, M.D.

I’m a family physician who graduated med school in ‘72 and practiced family med in West Palm Beach for 31 years. During that time I signed hundreds of death certificates. For the last 25+ years I’ve reviewed and testified in hundreds of medical negligence cases. In the last 5 years 90% involved nursing home negligence. Obviously many of these nursing patients died so I review a lot of death certificates. I can tell you that more often than not the cause of death listed bares no resemblance to the actual cause. Many doctors still list “cardiorespiratory arrest” as

AT&T 11:03 AM 68%

mail.google.com

Primary

I believe that doctors are using death by COVID-19 as a convenient diagnosis when they don’t really know what caused their death. Unless someone has tested + for the virus and had symptoms and died there is no way to attribute their death to COVID-19. As you point out the # of deaths due to the “pandemic” is highly inflated and in my opinion for political gain. Keep spreading the news and your right on point analysis.

You mean, when he suggested this strategy: "We show that in the UK and US context, suppression will minimally require a combination of social distancing of the entire population, home isolation of cases and household quarantine of their family members."

For 18 months! (Or potentially even longer, until a vaccine was created.) And even so the paper ended by saying “it is not at all certain that suppression will succeed long term.” Like I said, people should read and judge for themselves.

Fair. I still believe in some form we are looking at numerous repeated outbreaks until a vaccine is developed. Here In the U.S. we're struggling with "clusters." It's the speed that's deadly, not overall mortality rate. "Excess deaths" will tell a diff tale.Overwhelming cities

At first this might seem funny - rich folks don’t get to golf! It’s not. There is ~ZERO evidence these outdoor activities spread the virus. Thus for essentially no reason, the gov’t is destroying businesses and banning private activities. First they came for the golfers...

Hi Alex,

I follow you on Twitter.

Our county in Southern California, Riverside County, has just sent out orders that all golf courses, including private courses, will be shut down until June 10th to June 30th. You can't walk on them even far away from other people, much less play golf. The order extends far beyond golf courses and will be enforced by police, etc.

This is so outrageous. Is anyone doing anything to organize against these blatantly anti-Constitutional acts?
I called the local Republican party and they agree with these orders.

This is so wrong.....

An incredible chart: three countries had earlier and more effective “social distancing” than any others: France, Italy, and Spain - the three countries with the WORST epidemics. Wonder why. (Maybe because most transmission is intrafamilial and nosocomial? Just spitballing here.)

New French antibody data from a high school in Oise (north of Paris): 25 percent of 651 students, teachers, and others were infected. Yes, 1 in 4 - even more than today's NYC data!

No deaths in the group of 171 infected (median age 37). Nine hospitalized.

Is this double-counting of the state's count of the city's deaths how people get such huge numbers? I am really trying to understand. [illegible] did not respond to my question, at least not on the thread. And I still haven't seen a confirmed source for ALL-CAUSE deaths in NYC.

For 18 months! (Or potentially even longer, until a vaccine was created.) And even so the paper ended by saying “it is not at all certain that suppression will succeed long term.” Like I said, people should read and judge for themselves.

2/ We have a VACCINE for the flu. It is not perfect, but it can sharply reduce infections in some years, and it is generally widely distributed, especially to the people most at risk. That suppresses both the CFR and IFR for the flu.

3/ The 21% NYC antibody figure is likely low, both because it doesn't foot with plausible figures from other places (generally lower, but in places where deaths have been far lower), and because it takes time for people to develop antibodies, so the figure usually rises anyway.

4/ NYC and NYS seem to have made counterproductive decisions, including heavy ventilator use and sending elderly COVID patients to nursing homes (!). Also, some NYC hospitals faced serious strain in late March (unlike almost anywhere else in the US). Hospital strain is dangerous.

Alex Berenson @AlexBerenson · Apr 24

5/ Add all this up, and the COVID death rate will likely settle into the 0.25%-0.4% range (1 in 250 people infected to 1 in 400). Far from 20 times higher than flu. Meanwhile, the median age of death is 78-80. And unlike the flu, [illegible] is basically not dangerous to children.

Hearing from medical staff that hospitals are increasingly desperate to code patients and deaths as COVID even IN THE PRESENCE OF NEGATIVE TESTS (this seems to be a revenue issue, mostly, as they are hemorrhaging cash); please email with stories - or even better, hard evidence.

Hard not to when this much $$$ is on the table!!!

Fraud: Medicare / CARES act giving hospitals extra money for “Covid-19 Diagnosis”

Medicare COVID-19 Rates

Pneumonia diagnosis-related death	$5,000
COVID-19 Pneumonia death	$13,000
COVID-19 Pneumonia w/ ventilator death	$39,000

1/ @IHME_UW appears to have updated its model: It has cut the number of hospital beds needed for #COVID patients on the peak of April by 45% - from 262,000 to 141,000 and ICU beds by 26% - from almost 39,700 to 29,200. Yet deaths remain almost the same, around 80,000...

2/ Unfortunately, though the model updated just now, its projections remain inaccurate for actual use TODAY: for example, it predicts New York state on April 5 will need 24,000 beds and 6,000 ICU beds, about 1/3 more than the actual usage today. Not sure what to say about this...

35 145 491

At first this might seem funny - rich folks don't get to golf! It's not. There is ~ZERO evidence these outdoor activities spread the virus. Thus for essentially no reason, the gov't is destroying businesses and banning private activities. First they came for the golfers...

An incredible chart: three countries had earlier and more effective "social distancing" than any others: France, Italy, and Spain - the three countries with the WORST epidemics. Wonder why. (Maybe because most transmission is intrafamilial and nosocomial? Just spitballing here.)

2/ He now says both that the U.K. should have enough ICU beds and that the coronavirus will probably kill under 20,000 people in the U.K. - more than 1/2 of whom would have died by the end of the year in any case bc they were so old and sick.

Fair. I still believe in some form we are looking at numerous repeated outbreaks until a vaccine is developed. Here in the U.S. we're struggling with "clusters." It's the speed that's deadly, not overall mortality rate. "Excess deaths" will tell a diff tale.Overwhelming cities

Hah! Serious question, though. What's the percentage where the lockdowns make sense? I mean, I think we'd all agree that if 5% of the total US population were going to die, we would have to take incredible measures. What about 1%? What about 0.5%? 0.1%? Where do we draw the line?

Yeah, that's the hard part. Was watching "Contagion" the other night where the fatality rate was 25%-30% and the choices seemed clearer there (although nobody was wearing masks or social distancing!!!). This thing is in this middle zone where it's not as obvious

Justin Fox @foxjust · Apr 24
I'm mainly just trying to give people a better sense of the numbers so maybe we can make those choices halfway intelligently

Average NY latest-week revisions are only around 5%, and fairly stable, and by week 3 from latest are negligible. As such, it's easy to "adjust for revisions" in latest NY weeks. I project the remainder of April based on an assumed (steeply downward) path of excess deaths.

My first podcast, about 10 minutes long, discussing the NYS antibody findings today and other test results showing relatively widespread #COVID infections. It's a bit rough but I hope it's useful - please let me know!

It was good to hear more details on your take about the antibody tests. As far as the podcast I had to turn up the truck radio volume and then later in the podcast there were some loud noises and some shuffling type noises.

2/ Two points here - the deaths are likely to keep rising (two overnight), so this may understate the current IFR; on the other hand, this population has high comorbidities and many tests remain pending.

Overall, yet more evidence of very widespread asymptomatic transmission.

Update: I DELETED the thread on Florida deaths because I want to be sure the “date case counted” line refers to a death and not an infection report. I realized the language is ambiguous and want to be correct. I will check. Transparency. Regardless, the reporting lags are real.

Some states are more transparent about this than others. Indiana notes the time range of actual deaths they are reporting. Today they reported deaths that go back as far as over a week ago. This backdating is not nefarious (for the most part) - death totals are the laggiest data.

Some states do engage in it to an eyebrow-raising degree though. (Massachusetts has, at several point, reported several deaths over a month old. It also seems every centenarian in Massachusetts is dying of COVID.)

No, you are clearly misreading this: the city reports 9,562 "confirmed" and 4,865 "probable" deaths, for a total of 14,427. It also notes the state's version of the city count, 10,022, and explains the difference.

3/ In fact, the paper states explicitly "that U.S. hospitals could absorb a maximum of 26,000 to 56,000 additional ventilators at the peak of a national pandemic, as safe use of ventilators requires trained personnel."

4/ In other words, whatever happens with COVID, if we built a million new ventilators, 950,000 would be furniture.

Added bonus: the paper reports the US already has far more critical care beds per-capita than other nations: 35 per 100,000, compared to 12 in Italy, 7 in the UK...

this is versus the probability of shopping close to someone for a brief period of time and them coughing in that moment.

the chance is astronomically low.

1/ Another point about lockdowns and their effectiveness or lack thereof. The Germans found that a hard lockdown reduces R to 1 or so. But in a place like NYC, where a huge bolus of infections has occurred just before the lockdown (as the hospitalization data clearly show)...

139 Retweets 455 Likes

12 139 455

Alex Berenson ✓ @AlexBerenson · Apr 23

2/ Whether the R is 1 or 2 or even 3 matters less than it seems - because the population of people who are ALREADY infected is so large that the virus will inevitably infect everyone else (without extraordinary measures to protect small, vulnerable populations)...

7 48 256

Alex Berenson ✓ @AlexBerenson · Apr 23

3/ The math goes like this: If 10% of the population is infected, say, lockdowns can't extinguish the virus quickly enough to matter; if 1% is, the lockdowns must remain in place for a VERY long time to matter. Almost tautogically, they will come either too early or too late.

11 54 251

Alex Berenson ✓ @AlexBerenson · Apr 23

And by matter, I don't mean that the lockdowns will reduce deaths (except that we can expect treatments to improve slowly over time even without targeted therapies as physicians learn more about managing the disease) - just that they will end the chance of hospital overrun...

Wrong both ways, for several reasons.

1/ The flu case fatality rate is calculated off a huge base - 60 million Americans in 2017/18 - and flu deaths may be undercounted for the same reason coronavirus deaths are supposedly undercounted - they mainly occur in old, sick people.

> Justin Fox @foxjust
> Replying to @JakeAnbinder
> 20+ times the flu. Flu infection fatality rate is around 0.04% (case fatality rate is 0.1% but there are lots of unsymptomatic flu cases too), NYC IFR is 0.8% to 1.1%

42 156 520

Alex Berenson
@AlexBerenson

2/ We have a VACCINE for the flu. It is not perfect, but it can sharply reduce infections in some years, and it is generally widely distributed, especially to the people most at risk. That suppresses both the CFR and IFR for the flu.

3/ The 21% NYC antibody figure is likely low, both because it doesn't foot with plausible figures from other places (generally lower, but in places where deaths have been far lower), and because it takes time for people to develop antibodies, so the figure usually rises anyway.

And from a hospital executive, who makes a great point that overcoding of deaths may actually mess up research and treatment efforts:

1. Definitely erring on the side of coding everything COVID that presents with those symptoms. The cynic would say it's because of the increased payment, but frankly even with the 20% kicker it isn't that profitable to treat COVID (absent the fact that every dollar helps as we are well below fixed cost coverage now due to decrease volume/surgeries). The other side of that argument is that it is a patient/provider safety issue to err on that side and treat using extra caution until it's ruled out.

2. On the coding side, this likely gets changed as the diagnosis changes. Medicare and others have a rather effective audit process, so hospitals typically practice caution here and make sure to change to the correct diagnosis. On the death side, I don't know of any similar processes (in other words, there isn't necessarily a payment audit process for cause of death), so why would anyone go back and make sure they had it right, particularly if they weren't in a hospital setting.

Primary

3. This is going to result in problems doing real studies on the disease. We need accurate death counts and accurate co-morbidity and pre-existing condition studies to understand the disease. It's becoming more and more clear that the death rate is much lower than most thought (even though this was obvious from the beginning when we knew we weren't testing in a widespread manner). COVID seems to be either incredibly deadly (for a small percentage) or mild or even asymptomatic for most. Why is that? Is there something we can find to help us understand that even more? Those questions are harder to answer if you have a bunch of false data included in the set. Long term ramifications of the improper coding.

So typical of our political system . .thinking short term and ignoring the downstream effects.

And - for a different perspective - a physician who argues COVID deaths are being coded similarly to flu deaths and overcoding is rare:

Hi Alex,

I am a physician (you can Google my name to verify) who has been following your thoughts on Twitter. I think you do bring up valuable points about the merits of a lockdown i.e. tradeoffs between a recession and disease spread.

The facts that I find quite disheartening are how you are perpetuating the thought that physicians and hospitals are coding deaths as Covid deaths for either political and financial gain. There is a significant amount of people who are starting to believe that Covid deaths are being falsified. This cannot be further from the truth and it is sad that evidence). To take the leap that physicians will lazily or conveniently scribble Covid-19 as the cause of death is just nonsense. If anything, there is a myriad of untested or undiagnosed Covid deaths that are being written as "cardiopulmonary arrest."

There is now a significant amount of folks who genuinely believe that hospitals are coding traffic accident, homicide, etc deaths as Covid deaths (just read your replies on Twitter). There's also the myth that people are dying with Covid and not of Covid. A terminally ill cancer patient who dies of the flu is a flu death and that is how it has been coded for years. It's no different with Covid.

And from a hospital executive, who makes a great point that overcoding of deaths may actually mess up research and treatment efforts:

1. Definitely erring on the side of coding everything COVID that presents with those symptoms. The cynic would say it's because of the increased payment, but frankly even with the 20% kicker it isn't that profitable to treat COVID (absent the fact that every dollar helps as we are well below fixed cost coverage now due to decrease volume/surgeries). The other side of that argument is that it is a patient/provider safety issue to err on that side and treat using extra caution until it's ruled out.

2. On the coding side, this likely gets changed as the diagnosis changes. Medicare and others have a rather effective audit process, so hospitals typically practice caution here and make sure to change to the correct diagnosis. On the death side, I don't know of any similar processes (in other words, there isn't necessarily a payment audit process for cause of death, so why would anyone go back and make sure they had it right), particularly if they weren't in a hospital setting.

Primary

3. This is going to result in problems doing real studies on the disease. We need accurate death counts and accurate co-morbidity and pre-existing condition studies to understand the disease. It's becoming more and more clear that the death rate is much lower than most thought (even though this was obvious from the beginning when we knew we weren't testing in a widespread manner). COVID seems to be either incredibly deadly (for a small percentage) or mild or even asymptomatic for most. Why is that? Is there something we can find to help us understand that even more? Those questions are harder to answer if you have a bunch of false data included in the set. Long term ramifications of the improper coding.

So typical of our political system. . .thinking short term and ignoring the downstream effects.

And - for a different perspective - a physician who argues COVID deaths are being coded similarly to flu deaths and overcoding is rare:

Hi Alex,

I am a physician (you can Google my name to verify) who has been following your thoughts on Twitter. I think you do bring up valuable points about the merits of a lockdown i.e. tradeoffs between a recession and disease spread.

The facts that I find quite disheartening are how you are perpetuating the thought that physicians and hospitals are coding deaths as Covid deaths for either political and financial gain. There is a significant amount of people who are starting to believe that Covid deaths are being falsified. This cannot be further from the truth and it is sad that someone who is well educated and has research skills is trafficking in this.

For instance, I saw that you recently posted an email from

Primary

So the poll is unscientific, but it's still striking - almost 1 in 5 people who've answered said they plan to leave lockdown states for free states as early as June 1. I don't think that's realistic for people with families - more of a wish - but it shows the depth of the anger.

An incredible chart: three countries had earlier and more effective “social distancing” than any others: France, Italy, and Spain - the three countries with the WORST epidemics. Wonder why. (Maybe because most transmission is intrafamilial and nosocomial? Just spitballing here.)

1/ So on Monday, @laurawags of @vice asked me for an interview, and I agreed, under certain very specifuc conditions. Let's see what happened next. Note: Laura and I have never spoken by phone - this email thread is the entirety of our communication:

Laura Wagner

Hi Alex,

I'm a reporter with VICE and I'm interested in doing a Q&A with you about your coronavirus work. Your positions on COVID and COVID guidelines have certainly struck a nerve with many people and I think a straightforward Q&A--where you can lay out where and how media has biffed coverage of the coronavirus and I can ask you follow up questions about it--would be legitimately useful for our readers. I'm envisioning a fairly free-flowing discussion which I would then transcribe for publication.

Is this something you'd be interested in?

Alex Berenson

I'm very short on time. If you want to ask questions over email I will try to answer them, but only on the condition you don't do it Chatter-style and annotate or second-guess me after I have answered (in other words, it would have to be the equivalent of a live on-air interview). You ask, I answer, that's the end of it

The coronaflu vs. fluflu stuff is dumb; #COVID would have to be an order of magnitude worse than it is to justify the harm the lockdowns cause.

That said, who wants to tell the blue-checks that flu season is NOT A YEAR, but five months (really 3.5, early Dec. thru late March)?

And yes, #COVID is almost certainly (somewhat) more dangerous than an average or even a bad flu year - though, say it with me, NOT TO CHILDREN OR YOUNG ADULTS.

Alex, you never acknowledge my tweets, but these stats tell us a ton about the state of things in America...only 52 healthy people died from the virus in NYC...this is very important because it shows we could have kept vulnerable populations safe while keeping the rest at work.

For 18 months! (Or potentially even longer, until a vaccine was created.) And even so the paper ended by saying "it is not at all certain that suppression will succeed long term." Like I said, people should read and judge for themselves.

Fair. I still believe in some form we are looking at numerous repeated outbreaks until a vaccine is developed. Here in the U.S. we're struggling with "clusters." It's the speed that's deadly, not overall mortality rate. "Excess deaths" will tell a diff tale.Overwhelming cities

At first this might seem funny - rich folks don't get to golf! It's not. There is ~ZERO evidence these outdoor activities spread the virus. Thus for essentially no reason, the gov't is destroying businesses and banning private activities. First they came for the golfers...

> Hi Alex,
> I follow you on Twitter.

> Our county in Southern California, Riverside County, has just sent out orders that all golf courses, including private courses, will be shut down until June 10th to June 30th. You can't walk on them even far away from other people, much less play golf. The order extends far beyond golf courses and will be enforced by police, etc.
> This is so outrageous. Is anyone doing anything to organize against these blatantly anti-Constitutional acts?
> I called the local Republican party and they agree with these orders.

We haven't "saved" any lives. These people will eventually die from something so we've only extended some lives. Some for a few hours, some for a few days, many for a few weeks or months, and very, very few for a few years.

And we're destroying millions of livelihoods to do it.

What if it's 4%, per LA? Or 11%, per Sweden? Or 15%, per Germany and NY pregnant women? Or 32%, per Chelsea, MA? Is it merely of academic interest then? What if New York is more like Chelsea? If we're talking about what the tests say, let's talk about what the tests actually say.

> Caitlin Rivers, PhD @cmyeaton
> Whether seroprevalence is 2% or 3% is mostly of academic interest. What's clear is that the notion that we all got infected and didn't know it and now we are near herd immunity is completely unrealistic. Our communities are still almost completely susceptible. 2/

See, the people claiming false positives somehow matter for the Santa Clara study are conveniently ignoring the studies that show much, much higher rates in areas with more confirmed positives. The gap between recovered and active infections is huge everywhere...

And the "herd immunity" argument is a straw man. No one is saying the world has achieved immunity already (in that case, [illegible] would be much less dangerous than flu). The question is the true fatality rate, and the antibody tests

You're joking, right? R of 2 = 50% infected for immunity; R of 3 = 67% infected. Which is a relatively small difference, compared to the FAR LOWER fatality rate that the widespread infectivity implies.

Why spin everything as negatively as possible? What's the point?

> Florian Krammer @florian_krammer
> Replying to @basicbill @AlexBerenson
> I think this would be bad news for herd immunity. If 20% NYC were infected, the infectivity may be higher than expected which would mean the % immune needed to achieve herd immunity would be much higher.

By the way, @florian_krammer - your initial argument had nothing to do with herd immunity needing to be higher. It was that the test was wrong somehow and coming back with too many positives. So which is it? Is the figure wrong, or not - and if so, why?

I am not even arguing the test is wrong. If specificity is known, that can be factored in. I would like to know how the study was designed and who was sampled.

At first this might seem funny - rich folks don’t get to golf! It’s not. There is ~ZERO evidence these outdoor activities spread the virus. Thus for essentially no reason, the gov’t is destroying businesses and banning private activities. First they came for the golfers...

Hi Alex,

I follow you on Twitter.

Our county in Southern California, Riverside County, has just sent out orders that all golf courses, including private courses, will be shut down until June 10th to June 30th. You can't walk on them even far away from other people, much less play golf. The order extends far beyond golf courses and will be enforced by police, etc.

This is so outrageous. Is anyone doing anything to organize against these blatantly anti-Constitutional acts?
I called the local Republican party and they agree with these orders.

This is so wrong.....

Okay, maybe a graph will help? Here is what the [illegible] team predicted on March 16 for “mitigation” strategies. Please note: 1) there is NO scenario in which critical care beds are not overwhelmed...

1/ @IHME_UW appears to have updated its model: It has cut the number of hospital beds needed for #COVID patients on the peak of April by 45% - from 262,000 to 141,000 and ICU beds by 26% - from almost 39,700 to 29,200. Yet deaths remain almost the same, around 80,000...

2/ Unfortunately, though the model updated just now, its projections remain inaccurate for actual use TODAY: for example, it predicts New York state on April 5 will need 24,000 beds and 6,000 ICU beds, about 1/3 more than the actual usage today. Not sure what to say about this...

1/ So I think this is a really excellent, non-hysterical thread on the real potential dangers of #COVID - @JDVance1 is smart and thoughtful - and it highlights yet again why we must have widespread serological testing as soon as possible.

3/ And while acknowledging the economic crisis, Vance more or less throws up his hands, saying that it would have happened anyway. But the difference between voluntary social distancing and what we have now is the distance between recession and depression. That’s no exaggeration.

I agree with your point about a band that broad being next to useless except for pointing out the uncertainty. But the uncertainty combined with the asymmetry of risk does give you information on which to act.

Fair. I still believe in some form we are looking at numerous repeated outbreaks until a vaccine is developed. Here in the U.S. we're struggling with "clusters." It's the speed that's deadly, not overall mortality rate. "Excess deaths" will tell a diff tale.Overwhelming cities Serious question and I hope you respond with seriousness too.

COVID-19 has killed more Americans in 6 weeks than the flu does in a year.

And that is WITH all the stark measures we've taken.

"Flu +" seems like an understatement, no?

Can you say more about what you mean?

For 18 months! (Or potentially even longer, until a vaccine was created.) And even so the paper ended by saying “it is not at all certain that suppression will succeed long term.” Like I said, people should read and judge for themselves.

An incredible chart: three countries had earlier and more effective “social distancing” than any others: France, Italy, and Spain - the three countries with the WORST epidemics. Wonder why. (Maybe because most transmission is intrafamilial and nosocomial? Just spitballing here.)

What if it's 4%, per LA? Or 11%, per Sweden? Or 15%, per Germany and NY pregnant women? Or 32%, per Chelsea, MA? Is it merely of academic interest then? What if New York is more like Chelsea? If we're talking about what the tests say, let's talk about what the tests actually say.

3/ In fact, the paper states explicitly "that U.S. hospitals could absorb a maximum of 26,000 to 56,000 additional ventilators at the peak of a national pandemic, as safe use of ventilators requires trained personnel."

4 201 530

Alex Berenson
@AlexBerenson

4/ In other words, whatever happens with COVID, if we built a million new ventilators, 950,000 would be furniture.

Added bonus: the paper reports the US already has far more critical care beds per-capita than other nations: 35 per 100,000, compared to 12 in Italy, 7 in the UK...

5/ Here's a link to the paper (thoughtfully provided by the Times) so you can read and judge it for yourself.

I don't understand the point of trying to drive panic with stories that are so misleading - and, frankly, so easily checked.

Fair. I still believe in some form we are looking at numerous repeated outbreaks until a vaccine is developed. Here In the U.S. we're struggling with "clusters." It's the speed that's deadly, not overall mortality rate. "Excess deaths" will tell a diff tale.Overwhelming cities

1/ @IHME_UW appears to have updated its model: It has cut the number of hospital beds needed for #COVID patients on the peak of April by 45% - from 262,000 to 141,000 and ICU beds by 26% - from almost 39,700 to 29,200. Yet deaths remain almost the same, around 80,000...

2/ Unfortunately, though the model updated just now, its projections remain inaccurate for actual use TODAY: for example, it predicts New York state on April 5 will need 24,000 beds and 6,000 ICU beds, about 1/3 more than the actual usage today. Not sure what to say about this...

At first this might seem funny - rich folks don't get to golf! It's not. There is ~ZERO evidence these outdoor activities spread the virus. Thus for essentially no reason, the gov't is destroying businesses and banning private activities. First they came for the golfers...

> Hi Alex,
> I follow you on Twitter.
> Our county in Southern California, Riverside County, has just sent out orders that all golf courses, including private courses, will be shut down until June 10th to June 30th. You can't walk on them even far away from other people, much less play golf. The order extends far beyond golf courses and will be enforced by police, etc.
> This is so outrageous. Is anyone doing anything to organize against these blatantly anti-Constitutional acts?
> I called the local Republican party and they agree with these orders.

An incredible chart: three countries had earlier and more effective "social distancing" than any others: France, Italy, and Spain - the three countries with the WORST epidemics. Wonder why. (Maybe because most transmission is intrafamilial and nosocomial? Just spitballing here.)

1/ So I think this is a really excellent, non-hysterical thread on the real potential dangers of #COVID - @JDVance1 is smart and thoughtful - and it highlights yet again why we must have widespread serological testing as soon as possible.

2/ I would make a couple of points - it glides over just how concentrated the excess mortality risk appears to be in the very old and sick.Why isn't our focus on protecting THOSE folks rather than going immediately to lockdowns - which are hugely destructive by any measure?

Alex Berenson @AlexBerenson · 8 thg 4
3/ And while acknowledging the economic crisis, Vance more or less throws up his hands, saying that it would have happened anyway. But the difference between voluntary social distancing and what we have now is the distance between recession and depression. That's no exaggeration.

this whole lockdown started. He is not a social butterfly, but he does enjoy time with school friends. He needs structure and predictability and that is clearly not happening now. I try to keep a certain structure to our days, but it's hard because I am working, my husband is working and his older brother has lots of schoolwork he also needs help with. The other thing Colin is struggling with is not understanding why he has to do schoolwork when he's not in school…there have been many meltdowns and I expect many more before all is said and done.

I've never like social media for children because I think it keeps them from face to face interactions which are critical for their growing minds. However, due to the closure, they having issues with extremely high anxiety and now I'm seeing depression.

Their social and emotional needs are taking a serious hit. My son's special needs friends are not receiving needed therapies and are having regressions due to the isolation as well.

My daughter's senior year is a wash, but she's still expected to take an AP exam next month. The digital learning is a joke - the platforms crash every day.

They both are working still - my son at a grocery store and daughter at a fast food restaurant. I'm grateful for that - it's their only normalcy.

Hi Alex,

I have 3 children, 2 of whom are special needs.

My son is 4 with autism. His aba therapy ceased coming to our which is 6 hours per day,I, 5 days per week. Without intensive aba he is restless and hyper focused on one interest for days on end.

My daughter is 2 with cerebral palsy. Her physical therapy has ceased and the progress she was making toward walking has stalled completely.

We work with them the best we know throughout the day but we arent trained and we also have jobs.

Thanks

Say it with me: This is a tragedy. It is also a complete outlier case and should NOT impact our understanding that the risk to children from #SARS is essentially zero - far lower than the flu. Children regularly die of the flu, but we do not close schools nationwide for months.

How do they know that meningitis was from the Coronavirus and that's a rare complication from it? It just seems they are making up more stuff everyday and that EVERYTHING and every symptom is Coronavirus related. It's suspicious honestly.

exactly. She had strep, an actual known cause of meningitis. Tragic, and disgusting for fear-mongers to take advantage of it.

Denying kids an education, keeping them from playing together, and forcing them to stay home in some cases with abusive parents because they're at risk: a difficult choice. Denying them an education because we won't admit that they essentially aren't at risk: an unthinkable lie.

Where is the source on this? Do you have city/state records showing total daily deaths, or are you assuming all [illegible] deaths (confirmed, probable, both?) are additional deaths? As far as I know NYC/NYS have not provided recent all-cause mortality data. If I'm wrong, I apologize.

To be clear: New York City has obviously suffered excess deaths from #COVID in the last month (as has Spain, as has Italy). But that does not mean the numbers being widely reported are accurate, or represent the actual change that would have occurred if #SARSCoV2 did not exist...

Okay, someone pointed me to this, which offers an actual figure for [illegible] deaths from March 11 to April 13: 18,551. Which would imply 12,000 or more excess deaths. I cannot find the figure anywhere else, though, or the release.

3/ Thus the best death metric is all-cause mortality. The most recent available statistics show all-cause mortality has not increased in the US this year (in fact it has been lower than normal). Europe has seen a spike in the last couple of weeks, comparable to a bad flu year.

4/ Many recent screens have shown #SARS_CoV2 is far more widely spread than we realized – and thus much less dangerous:
In NY of pregnant women
MA of homeless people and the city of Chelsea
KS, random screening
CA, semi-random screening
GER, random screening
FRA, carrier sailors

5/ Thus we don't actually know the true infection fatality rate of SARS, but it looks more and more like it will settle in the 0.15% to 0.4% range (and not everyone becomes infected) - or 1.5x to 4x the flu.

1/ So I think this is a really excellent, non-hysterical thread on the real potential dangers of #COVID - @JDVance1 is smart and thoughtful - and it highlights yet again why we must have widespread serological testing as soon as possible.

3/ And while acknowledging the economic crisis, Vance more or less throws up his hands, saying that it would have happened anyway. But the difference between voluntary social distancing and what we have now is the distance between recession and depression. That's no exaggeration.

Because many of the states ratified and signed into law emergency powers for governors to use. It's quite broad and would be a tough battle to win in the courts.

1/ Some great data from Ohio, where began mass testing in prisons on April 11. The state now reports 3312 positive tests and 8 deaths among prisoners, 302 positive tests and 1 death among staff, for an infection fatality rate of 0.25%.

2/ Two points here - the deaths are likely to keep rising (two overnight), so this may understate the current IFR; on the other hand, this population has high comorbidities and many tests remain pending.

Overall, yet more evidence of very widespread asymptomatic transmission.

And by matter, I don't mean that the lockdowns will reduce deaths (except that we can expect treatments to improve slowly over time even without targeted therapies as physicians learn more about managing the disease) - just that they will end the chance of hospital overrun...

At this point, that appears to be ALL that lockdowns can do. Only hospitals and physicians and nurses are getting crushed anyway BECAUSE the lockdowns are destroying everything else they do (oh the irony). So there's that.

I don't think we were ever sold any different rationale. The reason for the lockdowns were to save the medical system. That's been done where it was necessary (NY area and maybe a couple others), and demonstrated as unnecessary elsewhere. Am I missing something?

Yes you are missing that the far left wants to crash this for political reasons and they are moving the goalposts everytime one thing is accomplished they come up with a new invisible target. Now it's "no one can die ever" or we stay locked down.

1/ So I think this is a really excellent, non-hysterical thread on the real potential dangers of #COVID - @JDVance1 is smart and thoughtful - and it highlights yet again why we must have widespread serological testing as soon as possible.

2/ I would make a couple of points - it glides over just how concentrated the excess mortality risk appears to be in the very old and sick.Why isn't our focus on protecting THOSE folks rather than going immediately to lockdowns - which are hugely destructive by any measure?

3/ And while acknowledging the economic crisis, Vance more or less throws up his hands, saying that it would have happened anyway. But the difference between voluntary social distancing and what we have now is the distance between recession and depression. That's no exaggeration.

1/ A while back I asked for information about how kids were coping with the lockdown. I received many answers. Unfortunately I got busy and didn't post any. I apologize to everyone who took the time to write. A sampling follows. Warning: it's upsetting.

Primary

For obvious reasons this must be kept anonymous.

I am a teacher in one of the states with a less severe lockdown. I usually give the kids an assignment around this time of year that involves going outside and measuring something in the sun. With us now doing school over the internet, I gave the kids this assignment and extra time to do it because I know with the whole situation they may need to be creative to do it, but I was clear to them that they can easily do it in their own yards or their buildings' parking lots so they don't have to go anywhere if they can't.

I received several e-mails from students who told me that their parents are not allowing them to go outside AT ALL. These kids, who are already dealing with the normal struggles of being teenagers, and who are doing so in a time of significantly increased mental health problems and suicides for teens, are being kept literally locked indoors for months. Under normal circumstances I'd be reporting this as abuse and I thought about doing so now, but what's the point? The parents are doing exactly what the state has made them think they are supposed to do.

My own kids are all still toddlers. Fortunately they seem to be handling it ok for the most part, but it's clear that it's taking a toll. We don't really have anywhere to let them play outside but I try to get them at least out in the driveway most days. They don't understand why they can't go to the playground or the toy store or anywhere that we used to take them, and I'm very worried that they're "learning" during all of this that their parents are cruel and that we don't want them around any longer since I have to keep telling them they can't go anywhere even when I do go shopping or something. We're doing our best and they seem ok even as they're getting more and more

In response to your query about children who are being adversely affected by his lock down I wanted to share my experience.

Primary

The fact that these children are not receiving their therapies is doing them and their families harm. Children with CP who do not get therapy are at risk to develop musculoskeletal problems that could require surgery and they will lose functional abilities (like independent walking) as they lose range of

Btw - the new Europe-wide mortality data came out yestersday and as more countries have fully reported early to mid-April, for the first time deaths have clearly passed the 2016/17 flu epidemic. (In people under 65, there have now been maybe 5,000 excess deaths.)

And I would agree that the Covid IFR may be in the 0.25%-0.4% range in places that have it more or less under control, that's obviously not always going to be the case. The serological studies out of Geneva and the Netherlands both put it at 0.8% so far

BTW - we agree that it is more dangerous overall than the flu, especially for the elderly (the mortality figures say so, and I have heard from too many non-hysterical doctors to disagree). But in some ways, trying to baseline the flu's IFR as a comparison is pointless...

Precisely because we have so much uncertainty around flu numbers. Let's worry about THIS virus. Can it kill? Yes. Cause hospital strain? Yes. Is there any chance it will kill a significant number of healthy people under 70? No. (Define significant as road traffic deaths, say.)

Thus, does our response make any sense from any kind of reasonable cost-benefit basis (and I am not just talking about the economy, but other public health problems)? No. And it makes less each day.

1/ @IHME_UW appears to have updated its model: It has cut the number of hospital beds needed for #COVID patients on the peak of April by 45% - from 262,000 to 141,000 and ICU beds by 26% - from almost 39,700 to 29,200. Yet deaths remain almost the same, around 80,000...
Alex Berenson @AlexBerenson
2/ Unfortunately, though the model updated just now, its projections remain inaccurate for actual use TODAY: for example, it predicts New York state on April 5 will need 24,000 beds and 6,000 ICU beds, about 1/3 more than the actual usage today. Not sure what to say about this...

An incredible chart: three countries had earlier and more effective “social distancing” than any others: France, Italy, and Spain - the three countries with the WORST epidemics. Wonder why. (Maybe because most transmission is intrafamilial and nosocomial? Just spitballing here.)

2/ Whether the R is 1 or 2 or even 3 matters less than it seems - because the population of people who are ALREADY infected is so large that the virus will inevitably infect everyone else (without extraordinary measures to protect small, vulnerable populations)...

3/ The math goes like this: If 10% of the population is infected, say, lockdowns can't extinguish the virus quickly enough to matter; if 1% is, the lockdowns must remain in place for a VERY long time to matter. Almost tautogically, they will come either too early or too late.

And by matter, I don't mean that the lockdowns will reduce deaths (except that we can expect treatments to improve slowly over time even without targeted therapies as physicians learn more about managing the disease) - just that they will end the chance of hospital overrun...

3 33 215

Alex Berenson @AlexBerenson · Apr 23

At this point, that appears to be ALL that lockdowns can do. Only hospitals and physicians and nurses are getting crushed anyway BECAUSE the lockdowns are destroying everything else they do (oh the irony). So there's that.

You’re not. Because six feet is not and has never been an evidence-based recommendation. The evidence is that nearly all transmission is ibtrafamilial, nosocomial, and through public transportation and occasional rare super-spreading public events.

At first this might seem funny - rich folks don't get to golf! It's not. There is ~ZERO evidence these outdoor activities spread the virus. Thus for essentially no reason, the gov't is destroying businesses and banning private activities. First they came for the golfers...

Hi Alex,

I follow you on Twitter.

Our county in Southern California, Riverside County, has just sent out orders that all golf courses, including private courses, will be shut down until June 10th to June 30th. You can't walk on them even far away from other people, much less play golf. The order extends far beyond golf courses and will be enforced by police, etc.

This is so outrageous. Is anyone doing anything to organize against these blatantly anti-Constitutional acts?
I called the local Republican party and they agree with these orders.

This is so wrong.....

2/ Unfortunately, though the model updated just now, its projections remain inaccurate for actual use TODAY: for example, it predicts New York state on April 5 will need 24,000 beds and 6,000 ICU beds, about 1/3 more than the actual usage today. Not sure what to say about this...

1/ So I think this is a really excellent, non-hysterical thread on the real potential dangers of #COVID - @JDVance1 is smart and thoughtful - and it highlights yet again why we must have widespread serological testing as soon as possible.

2/ I would make a couple of points - it glides over just how concentrated the excess mortality risk appears to be in the very old and sick.Why isn't our focus on protecting THOSE folks rather than going immediately to lockdowns - which are hugely destructive by any measure?

13 23 192

Alex Berenson @AlexBerenson · 8 apr.
3/ And while acknowledging the economic crisis, Vance more or less throws up his hands, saying that it would have happened anyway. But the difference between voluntary social distancing and what we have now is the distance between recession and depression. That's no exaggeration.

Fair. I still believe in some form we are looking at numerous repeated outbreaks until a vaccine is developed. Here in the U.S. we're struggling with "clusters." It's the speed that's deadly, not overall mortality rate. "Excess deaths" will tell a diff tale.Overwhelming cities

At first this might seem funny - rich folks don't get to golf! It's not. There is ~ZERO evidence these outdoor activities spread the virus. Thus for essentially no reason, the gov't is destroying businesses and banning private activities. First they came for the golfers...

An incredible chart: three countries had earlier and more effective "social distancing" than any others: France, Italy, and Spain - the three countries with the WORST epidemics. Wonder why. (Maybe because most transmission is intrafamilial and nosocomial? Just spitballing here.)

5/ Thus we don't actually know the true infection fatality rate of SARS, but it looks more and more like it will settle in the 0.15% to 0.4% range (and not everyone becomes infected) - or 1.5x to 4x the flu.

6/ That rate will be the same whether or not we have lockdowns – they can slow the spread but not stop it (unless we continue them forever). The initial point of the lockdowns was to save the hospital system, but the hospital system is under no strain. So what is the point now?

The point of lockdowns now is to save face. The point is to make it appear as if those who overreacted, didn't actually overreact.

One other key point - about 190,000 Americans over 85 have died this year, and 345,000 over 75. Many of those died from respiratory illness or pneumonia. Thus, depending on how loose the criteria becomes for [illegible] probable deaths, the [illegible] numbers can get very big very fast.

3/ The math goes like this: If 10% of the population is infected, say, lockdowns can't extinguish the virus quickly enough to matter; if 1% is, the lockdowns must remain in place for a VERY long time to matter. Almost tautogically, they will come either too early or too late.

And by matter, I don't mean that the lockdowns will reduce deaths (except that we can expect treatments to improve slowly over time even without targeted therapies as physicians learn more about managing the disease) - just that they will end the chance of hospital overrun...

At this point, that appears to be ALL that lockdowns can do. Only hospitals and physicians and nurses are getting crushed anyway BECAUSE the lockdowns are destroying everything else they do (oh the irony). So there's that.

Not so sure about that. If you lockdown many people indoors with some infected - the chances of infection are even increasing.

2/ In fact, the report says explicitly that “the initial duration of measures... will be several months.”

16 March 2020 Imperial College COVID-19 Response Team

…s therefore population-wide social distancing combined with home isolation of cases and school and university closure.

To avoid a rebound in transmission, these policies will need to be maintained until large stocks of vaccine are available to immunise the population – which could be 18 months or more. Adaptive hospital surveillance-based triggers for switching on and off population-wide social distancing and school closure offer greater robustness to uncertainty than fixed duration interventions and can be adapted for regional use (e.g. at the state level in the US). Given local epidemics are not perfectly synchronised, local policies are also more efficient and can achieve comparable levels of suppression to national policies while being in force for a slightly smaller proportion of the time. However, we estimate that for a national GB policy, social distancing would need to be in force for at least 2/3 of the time (for $R_0 \geq 2.4$, see Table 4) until a vaccine was available.

However, there are very large uncertainties around the transmission of this virus, the likely effectiveness of different policies and the extent to which the population spontaneously adopts risk reducing behaviours. This means it is difficult to be definitive about the likely initial duration of measures which will be required, except that it will be several months. Future decisions on when and for how long to relax policies will need to be informed by ongoing surveillance.

The measures used to achieve suppression might also evolve over time. As case numbers fall, it becomes more feasible to adopt intensive testing, contact tracing and quarantine measures also to

COVID-19 Alert No. 2
March 24, 2020

New ICD code introduced for COVID-19 deaths
This email is to alert you that a newly-introduced ICD code has been implemented to accurately capture mortality data for Coronavirus Disease 2019 (COVID-19) on death certificates.

Please read carefully and forward this email to the state statistical staff in your office who are involved in the preparation of mortality data, as well as others who may receive questions when the data are released.

What is the new code?
The new ICD code for Coronavirus Disease 2019 (COVID-19) is U07.1, and below is how it will appear in formal tabular list format.

U07.1 COVID-19
Excludes: Coronavirus infection, unspecified site (B34.2)
Severe acute respiratory syndrome [SARS], unspecified (U04.9)

The WHO has provided a second code, U07.2, for clinical or epidemiological diagnosis of COVID-19 where a laboratory confirmation is inconclusive or not available. Because laboratory test results are not typically reported on death certificates in the U.S., NCHS is not planning to implement U07.2 for mortality statistics.

When will it be implemented?
Immediately.

Will COVID-19 be the underlying cause?
The underlying cause depends upon what and where conditions are reported on the death certificate. However, the rules for coding and selection of the underlying cause of death are expected to result in COVID-19 being the underlying cause more often than not.

What happens if certifiers report terms other than the suggested terms?
If a death certificate reports coronavirus without identifying a specific strain or explicitly specifying that it is not COVID-19, NCHS will ask the states to follow up to verify whether or not the coronavirus was COVID-19.

I have stayed away from the HCQ issue - everyone is entitled to discuss or even protest the lockdowns, but physicians treat patients - but this is more proof: Data matter. Placebo-controlled trials matter. Anecdotes aren't science and shouldn't drive medical OR policy decisions.

2/ Kids with special needs are particularly hard hit.

In response to your query about children who are being adversely affected by his lock down I wanted to share my experience.

I am a pediatric physical therapist working (and a co-owner) in a clinic that provides physical, occupational and speech therapy services to children with various disabilities including cerebral palsy, autism spectrum disorder and various genetic and neurological diagnoses. We have been deemed an essential service and have kept our doors open after modifying the environment with enhanced sanitation and a "virtual" waiting room. However, the parents of our children are being told that their children are at very high risk to develop complications if their child contracts Covid-19. I have been unable to find any

The fact that these children are not receiving their therapies is doing them and their families harm. Children with CP who do not get therapy are at risk to develop musculoskeletal problems that could require surgery and they will lose functional abilities (like independent walking) as they lose range of motion and strength. Children with autism are becoming disregulated without their therapies resulting in increased behavior problems and creating chaos in their families as they struggle to understand the changes on their schedule and lack appropriate interventions.

This has been weighing on my mind and I appreciate you asking for input. This is a small

3/ Children with autism have had their routines disrupted and are having a difficult time adapting.

My name is and I am an Intervention Specialist (teach special ed). My own son is on the Autism spectrum, on the high functioning end. He has been struggling since this whole lockdown started. He is not a social butterfly, but he does enjoy time with school friends. He needs structure and predictability and that is clearly not happening now. I try to keep a certain structure to our days, but it's hard because I am working, my husband is working and his older brother has lots of schoolwork he also needs help with. The other thing Colin is struggling with is not understanding why he has to do schoolwork when he's not in school…there have been many meltdowns and I expect many more before all is said and done.

I've never like social media for children because I think it keeps them from face to face interactions which are critical for their growing minds. However, due to the closure, they

I have a senior daughter in high school and a son who has autism and is in his first year of tech school. Both are having issues with extremely high anxiety and now I'm seeing depression.

Their social and emotional needs are taking a serious hit. My son's special needs friends are not receiving needed therapies and are having regressions due to the isolation as well.

My daughter's senior year is a wash, but she's still expected to take an AP exam next month. The digital learning is a joke - the platforms crash every day.

They both are working still - my son at a grocery store and daughter at a fast food restaurant. I'm grateful for that - it's their only normalcy.

3/ In fact, the paper states explicitly "that U.S. hospitals could absorb a maximum of 26,000 to 56,000 additional ventilators at the peak of a national pandemic, as safe use of ventilators requires trained personnel."

4/ In other words, whatever happens with COVID, if we built a million new ventilators, 950,000 would be furniture.

Added bonus: the paper reports the US already has far more critical care beds per-capita than other nations: 35 per 100,000, compared to 12 in Italy, 7 in the UK...

5/ Here's a link to the paper (thoughtfully provided by the Times) so you can read and judge it for yourself.

I don't understand the point of trying to drive panic with stories that are so misleading - and, frankly, so easily checked.

Fair. I still believe in some form we are looking at numerous repeated outbreaks until a vaccine is developed. Here in the U.S. we're struggling with "clusters." It's the speed that's deadly, not overall mortality rate. "Excess deaths" will tell a diff tale.Overwhelming cities

1/ So I think this is a really excellent, non-hysterical thread on the real potential dangers of #COVID - @JDVance1 is smart and thoughtful - and it highlights yet again why we must have widespread serological testing as soon as possible.

2/ I would make a couple of points - it glides over just how concentrated the excess mortality risk appears to be in the very old and sick.Why isn't our focus on protecting THOSE folks rather than going immediately to lockdowns - which are hugely destructive by any measure?

3/ And while acknowledging the economic crisis, Vance more or less throws up his hands, saying that it would have happened anyway. But the difference between voluntary social distancing and what we have now is the distance between recession and depression. That's no exaggeration.

This story/thread came out late last night and got a little lost and it seems to me it counts as good news, rare these days, so I'm going to bump it:

> Alex Berenson ✓ @AlexBerenson
> True story: an old lady lived across the hall from me in the East Village. A very old lady. Her name was Gisa Dollinger. Born in 1902. When I met her she was over 100. She was an Austrian Jew who had barely gotten out before the Germans came in, gone to Shanghai...

It's more about getting the stuff about my editors on the record one time, especially since I'm not going to waste their time by asking them again to speak for me now that I know folks writing hit pieces won't bother to quote them. (Plus my work at the Times speaks for itself.)

You mean, when he suggested this strategy: "We show that in the UK and US context, suppression will minimally require a combination of social distancing of the entire population, home isolation of cases and household quarantine of their family members."

For 18 months! (Or potentially even longer, until a vaccine was created.) And even so the paper ended by saying "it is not at all certain that suppression will succeed long term." Like I said, people should read and judge for themselves.

Fair. I still believe in some form we are looking at numerous repeated outbreaks until a vaccine is developed. Here in the U.S. we're struggling with "clusters." It's the speed that's deadly, not overall mortality rate. "Excess deaths" will tell a diff tale.Overwhelming cities

1/ @IHME_UW appears to have updated its model: It has cut the number of hospital beds needed for #COVID patients on the peak of April by 45% - from 262,000 to 141,000 and ICU beds by 26% - from almost 39,700 to 29,200. Yet deaths remain almost the same, around 80,000...

At first this might seem funny - rich folks don't get to golf! It's not. There is ~ZERO evidence these outdoor activities spread the virus. Thus for essentially no reason, the gov't is destroying businesses and banning private activities. First they came for the golfers...

An incredible chart: three countries had earlier and more effective “social distancing” than any others: France, Italy, and Spain - the three countries with the WORST epidemics. Wonder why. (Maybe because most transmission is intrafamilial and nosocomial? Just spitballing here.)

4/ Many recent screens have shown [illegible] is far more widely spread than we realized – and thus much less dangerous:

5/ Thus we don't actually know the true infection fatality rate of SARS, but it looks more and more like it will settle in the 0.15% to 0.4% range (and not everyone becomes infected) - or 1.5x to 4x the flu.

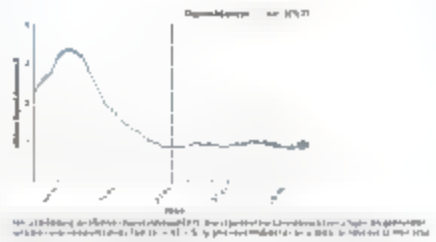
Alex Berenson @AlexBerenson · Apr 19

1/ This email came from a German reader. To summarize: on April 15 the official German public health/disease control institute published a paper showing that moderate social distancing reduced [illegible] spread but the hard lockdown was useless. [illegible]



I have hate news from germany for you that I have not seen in your feed yet. I am sure in the usa this is not known.

they are taken from a recent rki report (official state agency) from 15.04 and are publicly available.
https://www.rki.de/DE/Content/Infekt/EpidBull/Archiv/2020/Ausgaben/17_20_SARS-CoV2_Vorab.pdf?__blob=publicationFile interesting is this graphic (Abb.4) about the reproduction number R.

in germany we are testing a lot. we are currently talking about reopen the lockdown slowly (we are talking about a ban on contact) in connection with the reproduction number. permanently below 1 is the target. that makes march 21. the joke: the full lockdown was not until march 23 :-)

thus, the RKI confirms that:
a) the full lockdown was not necessary
(b) the full lockdown R has not been further reduced

Alex Berenson
@AlexBerenson

Follow

2/ Of note, the paper assumes a reproduction cycle of 4 days. Thus the epidemic can spread fast - and will be hugely sensitive to changes in R (how many people 1 infected person infects in turn). At an R of 3.1 with a cycle of 4 days, 1 infection will become 10,000 in a month!

Fun fact from the @cdcgpv surveillance data: of 4,000 #COVID hospitalizations for which they provide detailed age data, 29 were in people under 18. That's not deaths or ICU visits - that's hospitalizations. The closing of the schools is nearly criminal at this point.

Wrong both ways, for several reasons.

1/ The flu case fatality rate is calculated off a huge base - 60 million Americans in 2017/18 - and flu deaths may be undercounted for the same reason coronavirus deaths are supposedly undercounted - they mainly occur in old, sick people.

1/ Yes, I was talking to an epidemiologist about this; it's like what happened early on with HIV, where we pretended for years everyone was at similar risk. One reason that changed is that gay rights groups realized diluting prevention efforts ultimately made them less effective.

2/ Unfortunately, this time around, the unwillingness by public health experts to be honest hasn't just frightened a lot of people who really don't need to be (while failing to protect those who are) - it's done huge damage to the economy, society, education, and children.

I don't know how many it'll kill, and I believe a balance will need to be struck between distancing and reopening, but to say that Germany, Spain, France, Australia, NZ, all these countries are over reacting is highly highly unlikely.

Actually, it's not unlikely at all. Any student of history can recognize the signs of mass hysteria, and of psychology, the effects of groupthink. The U.K., for example, caved in to worldwide peer pressure, which is also being exerted on Sweden (go, Sweden)!

2/ I would make a couple of points - it glides over just how concentrated the excess mortality risk appears to be in the very old and sick.Why isn't our focus on protecting THOSE folks rather than going immediately to lockdowns - which are hugely destructive by any measure?

Alex Berenson @AlexBerenson · 8. 4.
3/ And while acknowledging the economic crisis, Vance more or less throws up his hands, saying that it would have happened anyway. But the difference between voluntary social distancing and what we have now is the distance between recession and depression. That's no exaggeration.

Glad to see @ScottGottliebMD posting this, but he actually misread the study. NONE of the 318 clusters occurred outdoors (a cluster was defined as 3+ cases, and totaled ~1,250 infections). The two outdoor infections were out of a total of 7,000+ cases.

Scott Gottlieb, MD @ScottGottliebMD
New: Study of 318 outbreaks in China found transmission occurred out-of-doors in only one, involving just 2 cases. Most occurred in home or public transport. Raises key chance for states to move services outdoors (religious, gym classes, restaurants, etc).

Denying kids an education, keeping them from playing together, and forcing them to stay home in some cases with abusive parents because they're at risk: a difficult choice. Denying them an education because we won't admit that they essentially aren't at risk: an unthinkable lie.

This Arkansas story is seriously underreported. Governor Hutchinson is being attacked for refusing a shelter-in-place order. But there are few active cases, except those identified by testing asymptomatic carriers in the prison system.

All Birx talks about is asymptomatic spread, which she says with eerie doom and ominous warnings. But it actually means this thing is much less deadly and much less people even get sick. And that herd immunity is occurring in spite of her and Fauci.

No, you are clearly misreading this: the city reports 9,562 "confirmed" and 4,865 "probable" deaths, for a total of 14,427. It also notes the state's version of the city count, 10,022, and explains the difference.

To be clear: New York City has obviously suffered excess deaths from [illegible] in the last month (as has Spain, as has Italy). But that does not mean the numbers being widely reported are accurate, or represent the actual change that would have occurred if [illegible] did not exist...

Okay, someone pointed me to this, which offers an actual figure for #NYC deaths from March 11 to April 13: 18,551. Which would imply 12,000 or more excess deaths. I cannot find the figure anywhere else, though, or the release.

Unbelievable but true - I mentioned this a few weeks ago - the price of oil is close to going below zero (producers will have to pay others to take and store it, because closing Wells is difficult). If the lockdowns don't end soon, no stimulus package will big enough to matter.

The price of US oil has fallen to record lows, as demand dries up and storage runs out.

The price of a barrel of West Texas Intermediate (WTI), the benchmark for US oil, has plunged more than 50% to less than $9 a barrel.

The oil market has come under intense pressure during the coronavirus pandemic with a huge slump in demand.

US storage facilities are now struggling to cope with the glut of oil, weakening prices further.

1/ A while back I asked for information about how kids were coping with the lockdown. I received many answers. Unfortunately I got busy and didn't post any. I apologize to everyone who took the time to write. A sampling follows. Warning: it's upsetting.

Primary

For obvious reasons this must be kept anonymous

I am a teacher in one of the states with a less severe lockdown. I usually give the kids an assignment around this time of year that involves going outside and measuring something in the sun. With us now doing school over the internet, I gave the kids this assignment and extra time to do it because I know with the whole situation they may need to be creative to do it, but I was clear to them that they can easily do it in their own yards or their buildings' parking lots so they don't have to go anywhere if they can't.

I received several e-mails from students who told me that their parents are not allowing them to go outside AT ALL. These kids, who are already dealing with the normal struggles of being teenagers, and who are doing so in a time of significantly increased mental health problems and suicides for teens, are being kept literally locked indoors for months. Under normal circumstances I'd be reporting this as abuse and I thought about doing so now, but what's the point? The parents are doing exactly what the state has made them think they are supposed to do.

My own kids are all still toddlers. Fortunately they seem to be handling it ok for the most part, but it's clear that it's taking a toll. We don't really have anywhere to let them play outside but I try to get them at least out in the driveway most days. They don't understand why they can't go to the playground or the toy store or anywhere that we used to take them, and I'm very worried that they're "learning" during all of this that their parents are cruel and that we don't want them around any longer since I have to keep telling them they can't go anywhere even when I do go shopping or something. We're doing our best and they seem ok even as they're getting more and more

2/ Kids with special needs are particularly hard hit.

Primary

In response to your query about children who are being adversely affected by his lock down I wanted to share my experience.

I am a pediatric physical therapist working (and a co-owner) in a clinic that provides physical, occupational and speech therapy services to children with various disabilities including cerebral palsy, autism spectrum disorder and various genetic and neurological diagnoses. We have been deemed an essential service and have kept our doors open after modifying the environment with enhanced sanitation and a "virtual" waiting room. However, the parents of our children are being told that their children are at very high risk to develop complications if their child contracts Covid-19. I have been unable to find any

The fact that these children are not receiving their therapies is doing them and their families harm. Children with CP who do not get therapy are at risk to develop musculoskeletal problems that could require surgery and they will lose functional abilities (like independent walking) as they lose range of motion and strength. Children with autism are becoming disregulated without their therapies resulting in increased behavior problems and creating chaos in their families as they struggle to understand the changes on their schedule and lack appropriate interventions.

This has been weighing on my mind and I appreciate you asking for input. This is a small

Yes, one of the uglier aspects of Team Apocalypse. Hi @kurteichenwald (who went so far as to suggest that people who get sick protesting a lockdown be DENIED medical care, because... they're bad people, or something.) Fortunately there will be no surge, so it's not a problem.

The virus shouldn't be political, but I've noticed that most of those "rooting for the virus" to kill more people have at least 3 anti-Trump tweets. This shouldn't be a political issue!

Amen. Ironically, I can't stand Trump and I'm the guy Alex retweeted, so take heart there's at least one not making it political.

2/ I would make a couple of points - it glides over just how concentrated the excess mortality risk appears to be in the very old and sick.Why isn't our focus on protecting THOSE folks rather than going immediately to lockdowns - which are hugely destructive by any measure?

13 23 192

Alex Berenson @AlexBerenson · 8. 4.
3/ And while acknowledging the economic crisis, Vance more or less throws up his hands, saying that it would have happened anyway. But the difference between voluntary social distancing and what we have now is the distance between recession and depression. That's no exaggeration.

Bumping this from last night because it's so important; German data (presented by a government institute) show moderate social distancing slows #SARS_COV_2 spread to manageable levels with no lockdowns needed.

Alex Berenson @AlexBerenson

1/ This email came from a German reader. To summarize: on April 15 the official German public health/disease control institute published a paper showing that moderate social distancing reduced #SARS_CoV2 spread but the hard lockdown was useless.

Have we ever thought that this 'hard' lockdown originated in China - and then the rest of the world blindly aped it - without researching its efficacy. Wasn't this also 'anecdotal' evidence-based on which we took large scale destructive action?

See, the people claiming false positives somehow matter for the Santa Clara study are conveniently ignoring the studies that show much, much higher rates in areas with more confirmed positives. The gap between recovered and active infections is huge everywhere...

And the "herd immunity" argument is a straw man. No one is saying the world has achieved immunity already (in that case, #COVID would be much less dangerous than flu). The question is the true fatality rate, and the antibody tests are our best signal.

An incredible chart: three countries had earlier and more effective "social distancing" than any others: France, Italy, and Spain - the three countries with the WORST epidemics. Wonder why. (Maybe because most transmission is intrafamilial and nosocomial? Just spitballing here.)

2/ He now says both that the U.K. should have enough ICU beds and that the coronavirus will probably kill under 20,000 people in the U.K. - more than 1/2 of whom would have died by the end of the year in any case bc they were so old and sick.

Fair. I still believe in some form we are looking at numerous repeated outbreaks until a vaccine is developed. Here in the U.S. we're struggling with "clusters." It's the speed that's deadly, not overall mortality rate. "Excess deaths" will tell a diff tale.Overwhelming cities

An incredible chart: three countries had earlier and more effective “social distancing” than any others: France, Italy, and Spain - the three countries with the WORST epidemics. Wonder why. (Maybe because most transmission is intrafamilial and nosocomial? Just spitballing here.)

1/ Another point about lockdowns and their effectiveness or lack thereof. The Germans found that a hard lockdown reduces R to 1 or so. But in a place like NYC, where a huge bolus of infections has occurred just before the lockdown (as the hospitalization data clearly show)...

12 138 454

Alex Berenson

2/ Whether the R is 1 or 2 or even 3 matters less than it seems - because the population of people who are ALREADY infected is so large that the virus will inevitably infect everyone else (without extraordinary measures to protect small, vulnerable populations)...

3/ The math goes like this: If 10% of the population is infected, say, lockdowns can't extinguish the virus quickly enough to matter; if 1% is, the lockdowns must remain in place for a VERY long time to matter. Almost tautogically, they will come either too early or too late.

11 54 260

Alex Berenson @AlexBerenson · Apr 23

And by matter, I don't mean that the lockdowns will reduce deaths (except that we can expect treatments to improve slowly over time even without targeted therapies as physicians learn more about managing the disease) - just that they will end the chance of hospital overrun...

Why can't the US media and (blue-state) policymakers keep two ideas in mind at once? [illegible] can be dangerous, especially to the elderly - but to respond by denying kids an education (and generally wrecking the economy and society with lockdowns of dubious value) is a mistake.

5/ Add all this up, and the COVID death rate will likely settle into the 0.25%-0.4% range (1 in 250 people infected to 1 in 400). Far from 20 times higher than flu. Meanwhile, the median age of death is 78-80. And unlike the flu, [illegible] is basically not dangerous to children.

At this point, given the LA/Santa Clara/NY pregnant/Chelsea MA/Boston homeless/Johnson County/German/French carrier data - and the EMPTY hospitals - in any rational world, our conversation would be immediately turning to how quickly we can end the lockdowns and open schools.

Btw: missed this yesterday, but @GovofCO is ending the Colorado lockdown on May 1 - retail, offices, then bars and restaurants by mid-May. Believe he is the first Democratic governor to take this step. Wonder why no one is screaming about the imminent Rocky Mountain apocalypse.

Some Colorado businesses can reopen May 1 as Polis shifts from stay-at-home to 'safer at home'

Retail businesses will be allowed to reopen May 1, though restaurants and schools will remain closed

April 20.

Retailers will have the option to open May 1, Polis said, as long as they have social-distancing policies in place. Business offices can reopen the following Monday, May 4, he said, although he added telecommuting should be maximized as much as possible, particularly with older employees.

Restaurants and bars will stay closed initially but might be allowed to open in mid-May, he said. Schools will not reopen immediately. Personal service providers, like hair salons, will be able to reopen with some precautions on April 27, such as hair stylists wearing gloves. Gyms, movie theaters, real estate showings – though not open houses – and child care can restart then, too.

You're joking, right? R of 2 = 50% infected for immunity; R of 3 = 67% infected. Which is a relatively small difference, compared to the FAR LOWER fatality rate that the widespread infectivity implies.

Why spin everything as negatively as possible? What's the point?

In a normal investigative reporting world the biggest question being chased right now might be how the guy who predicted "mad sheep" and nine-figure bird flu deaths and whose model depends on 13-year-old code he hasn't released somehow has the ear of the world's governments.

BTW - we agree that it is more dangerous overall than the flu, especially for the elderly (the mortality figures say so, and I have heard from too many non-hysterical doctors to disagree). But in some ways, trying to baseline the flu's IFR as a comparison is pointless...

...therefore population-wide social distancing combined with home isolation of cases and school and university closure.

To avoid a rebound in transmission, these policies will need to be maintained until large stocks of vaccine are available to immunise the population – which could be 18 months or more. Adaptive hospital surveillance-based triggers for switching on and off population wide social distancing and school closure offer greater robustness to uncertainty than fixed duration interventions and can be adapted for regional use (e.g. at the state level in the US). Given local epidemics are not perfectly synchronised, local policies are also more efficient and can achieve comparable levels of suppression to national policies while being in force for a slightly smaller proportion of the time. However, we estimate that for a national GB policy, social distancing would need to be in force for at least 2/3 of the time (for $R_0 = 2.4$, see Table 4) until a vaccine was available.

However, there are very large uncertainties around the transmission of this virus, the likely effectiveness of different policies and the extent to which the population spontaneously adopts risk reducing behaviours. This means it is difficult to be definitive about the likely initial duration of measures which will be required, except that it will be several months. Future decisions on when and for how long to relax policies will need to be informed by ongoing surveillance.

The measures used to achieve suppression might also evolve over time. As case numbers fall, it becomes more feasible to adopt intensive testing, contact tracing and quarantine measures also to

1/ As you sit home watching #COVID death counts spiral, please know the official @CDCgov guidance for coding COVID-related deaths is as follows: any death where the disease "caused or is assumed to have caused or contributed to death." Confirmed lab tests are not required...

1:06 PM 29%

cdc.gov

NVSS National Vital Statistics System

COVID-19 Alert No. 2
March 24, 2020

New ICD code introduced for COVID-19 deaths
This email is to alert you that a newly-introduced ICD code has been implemented to accurately capture mortality data for Coronavirus Disease 2019 (COVID-19) on death certificates.

Please read carefully and forward this email to the state statistical staff in your office who are involved in the preparation of mortality data, as well as others who may receive questions when the data are released.

What is the new code?
The new ICD code for Coronavirus Disease 2019 (COVID-19) is U07.1, and below is how it will appear in formal tabular list format.

U07.1 COVID-19
Excludes: Coronavirus infection, unspecified site (B34.2)
Severe acute respiratory syndrome [SARS], unspecified (U04.9)

The WHO has provided a second code, U07.2, for clinical or epidemiological diagnosis of COVID-19 where a laboratory confirmation is inconclusive or not available. Because laboratory test results are not typically reported on death certificates in the U.S., NCHS is not planning to implement U07.2 for mortality statistics.

When will it be implemented?
Immediately.

Will COVID-19 be the underlying cause?
The underlying cause depends upon what and where conditions are reported on the death certificate. However, the rules for coding and selection of the underlying cause of death are expected to result in COVID-19 being the underlying cause more often than not.

What happens if certifiers report terms other than the suggested terms?
If a death certificate reports coronavirus without identifying a specific strain or explicitly specifying that it is not COVID-19, NCHS will ask the states to follow up to verify whether or not the coronavirus was COVID-19.

Alex,
remember when Gov DeWine announced " there are likely over 100,000 undiagnosed cases of COVID-19 in the state thus far" in March?

"We have a panel of 14 doctors," said DeWine.

Shouldn't journalists be asking those doctors why they were so wrong?

Michael J. Wise @MichaelJWise1 · Apr 25
In some perverse way, maybe DeWine was closer than we thought. There was obviously community spread happening across the country in January and February. I think 100k was still just played up for gross fearmongering, but maybe he was closer than we would have thought.

This is part of a bigger issue: At some point people will start to realize that not one major US celebrity or sports or political figure has died or even been hospitalized (as far as I can tell) - and that fact too will help lift the fog of panic.

It looks like 2/1-4/18 all-cause deaths in NYC are up 85% from average over the same period from 2017-2019. it would be higher over a narrower date range but i'm not sure how to do that using this site.

The Pacific Police Department said that of the 408 people contacted by officers on Linda Mar Beach from April 17-19, 275 were told to leave after informing police they lived more than five miles from the beach.

Police chief Daniel Steidle also noted that over the same three-day period, "roughly 45% of the vehicles counted were from outside of five miles from where they are registered."

1/ Okay - I promised an answer, so here goes, quickly.

For several reasons it is not true that "COVID-19 has killed more Americans in six weeks than the flu does in a year." First off, on the most basic level, the flu kills as many as 60,000+ people in some years.

2/ The six weeks v. year comparison is also misleading. Flu season is 17-20 weeks, with short in-season peaks. Also, we are coding COVID deaths aggressively, and most people who die are elderly and ill. Knowing how many people died WITH rather than OF COVID is impossible for now.

To be clear: New York City has obviously suffered excess deaths from #COVID in the last month (as has Spain, as has Italy). But that does not mean the numbers being widely reported are accurate, or represent the actual change that would have occurred if #COVID did not exist...

Alex Berenson @AlexBerenson · Apr 21
Okay, someone pointed me to this, which offers an actual figure for #NYC deaths from March 11 to April 13: 18,551. Which would imply 12,000 or more excess deaths. I cannot find the figure anywhere else, though, or the release.

From a prominent US physician/scientist, whose institution won't even disclose how many (few) #COVID deaths it has, and who notes that even some cancer surgeries (!) are now classified as elective:

I am writing you to thank you for your twitter posts. You are a sane voice in an insane world.

As background, I am a cur[illegible] self-know physician/scientist ( etc etc--google will verify). My father was also a Holocaust survivor, which perhaps influences my thinking.

The lack of science behind the world's response to the virus is the most frightening thing I have seen in my lifetime. We have given up all of our constitutional rights and for all intents and purposes live in one of the most restrictive police states in the history of mankind. We can't go outside, our children can't have play dates, we cannot protest etc. This is not about a virus--and it's certainly not based on a scientific assessment of the data about the way meant to mislead the masses. And the vast majority of my physician colleagues believe the fearmongering and think we should stay locked up forever. I cannot believe the rapidity of the mass brainwashing.

I work at [illegible] as of today there have been 10 total deaths with covid (I am not even sure they are because of covid) in the entire health system over the entire almost 7 weeks we have been locked up. But that is a "secret" and we are not allowed to share the daily dashboard on social media.

Many cancer surgeries have become "elective," chemotherapy is postponed, physicians are forced to make up new treatment plans for cancer patients that have no basis in evidence, and clinical trials and research have been shut down. It would be a great surprise if the impact on the 2/ Further, the test has three categories of results - positive, negative, and indeterminate- meaning some evidence of antibodies but not a fully positive finding. Indeterminate results are also evidence of exposure. Why didn't the state report them?

coronavirus.health.ny.gov/system/files/d

The results for this test are reported as reactive, nonreactive or indeterminate. It is important to understand that this is a novel virus and we continue to advance in our understanding of COVID-19. Discuss any concerns or questions you may have about COVID-19 with your medical provider.

What does a reactive result mean?

A reactive result on this test indicates that IgG antibodies to SARS-CoV-2 were present in the blood specimen. A reactive result can mean you had infection with SARS-CoV-2 in the past or it can mean you are currently infected. If you did not test positive for SARS-CoV-2 already, another test may be needed to see if you are currently infected.*

* Note: A reactive result may be due to past or present infection with non-SARS-CoV-2 strains. However, specifically for the Wadsworth Center/WCI SARS-CoV-2 IgG test has been determined to be 93 to 100%. Therefore, significant cross-reactivity to other human respiratory viruses is not expected.

What does a nonreactive result mean?

A nonreactive result on this test means that IgG antibodies to SARS-CoV-2 were not present in the blood. However you may still be infected with SARS-CoV-2. An additional test would be needed to determine if you are infected or not. This test is called a molecular diagnostic test and can be done with a swab of your nose or throat or a test of your spit.

What does an indeterminate result mean?

An indeterminate result means that the test did not produce a clear nonreactive or reactive result. This could happen if the test reacted with other antibodies in the blood or if you do have SARS-CoV-2 IgG antibodies but the levels are not too low to be reported as reactive.

Per @neil_ferguson (you can trust him!), 1/2 to 2/3s of all #COVID deaths occur in people who would have died this year. Another way to look at it: the median age of people who die from/with #COVID tends to be HIGHER than average life expectancy in the countries where they die.

Israel looked at the data of who was dying from corona and understood that the lockdown is unsustainable. They crafted rules based on data and science. You can quibble with some of it, but when we don't have a silver bullet, isn't this what public health officials should do?

> This morning government announced major relaxation of lockdown: Most businesses allowed to open with the exception of entertainment venues and mass gatherings. Selective lockdown remain on a few (mostly ultra-Orthodox) communities where adherence to guidance has been low.

Sadly, these protests will accomplish nothing imo. The only protest that may work are business owners reopening, peaceful but armed citizens defending said businesses, and people going back to shopping and living life normally.

Quite simply, ignore the tyrant's orders.

3/ Yep - that's 27 percent requiring hospitalization "since March"! (How to lie while you tell the truth.) One quarter, or seven, have been in the ICU. None have died.

And, oh yeah, these aren't actually children at all. They're defined as being up to 25...

Technically the order only applies to the legislator who filed the lawsuit, but in that county at least, stay-at-home is effectively dead. It was won because Pritzker violated state law: IL law requires emergency executive orders only last 30 days and Pritzker exceeded 30 days.

Hi Alex,

I cannot thank you enough for all of your hard work and level-headed reporting on Coronavirus these last few months. I do not have a Twitter account, but came across your feed while searching for real-time, fact-driven reporting on the outbreak sometime in March. I have been a faithful daily reader ever since. Your posts are a much welcome counterpoint to the often-changing, but always-panicked daily drumbeat from "Team Apocalypse."

I wanted to write to quickly echo a theme that seems to have emerged in some of your more recent posts. I am a 36 year old securities lawyer living in Hoboken, working in Manhattan. Over the last week or so, the chorus of friends and relatives that live in and around NYC and who are shell of itself when this lockdown ever ends. The two, seemingly conflicting things that struck me based on any number of conversations I've had this past week, were, first the political leanings of the group (New York City is no bastion of red conservatism), and second, that the concerns shared among the group had very little to do with the threat of the disease, but much more to do with the impact of the lockdowns. I will also note that these were generally people in professional positions that are still getting paid during this time, and so my note here probably does not even capture the general tenor of a much larger number of people who aren't lawyers, accountants, bankers or traders, and who themselves I would estimate, aren't slacking around while their hospitality, entertainment, luxury or other 'non-essential' business is shuttered.

I know my experience is anecdotal and so might be a complete outlier in the grand scale of the 25 million people in the tri-state area. But, at least in a few cases, the some

Alex, I have a 6, 4, and 2 year old. The kids are ok in that they are healthy and live in a happy, safe home. My little guy does 12 piece puzzles all day (the weather has been bad). Does one, takes it apart, does it again. Over and over. Only a mother who watches her kids would see this as a problem. It's like his world has become so small. Every motherly instinct I have (and I'm new to this and not that great) tells me my children need to be outdoors, at the playground, learning & playing new sports, and around their little buddies. I miss school. I think their teachers are great influences on them. We have no family near us, so teachers are their only break from me. And I'm not allowed to offer ANY of those opportunities to them. And it's the most awful feeling in the world. I don't know what to do. I'm so helpless. I can't take care of them. JB Pritzker, a man I have never met in my life is barking orders at me and DESTROYING my children's childhood. I only get one shot reason, this irks me in the worst way. Like adults aren't smart enough or wise enough like He to play in a group of 4? Does he think his state is full of idiots who need to be babysat so strictly and if left to their own accord will get in a foursome and sneeze into each others mouths? Or, alternately, is there some study out about how only 2 people can share the outdoor air per 200 yards? If that's the case, shouldn't he share that with us idiots? Seems like important info. But something tells me this is just some rule this man is putting in place to flex his authority. And in what other areas is he doing this?! Is closing schools just his way of feeling powerful? Is he enjoying the power so much that he will ruin summer for all of Illinois' youth? How can we be sure!?

WHAT DO WE DO?! HELP!

So Ontario physician didn't answer my question about how many patients she has - she blocked me instead. The problem with the social distancing shaming she (and others) use is that the fallout is terribly destructive. Like another month of closed schools.

> Dr. McCready, how many is that? I only ask because per official Ontario data, the province (population 15 million) has 252 #COVID patients in ICUs. Which definitely seems like a good reason to lock up the other 14,999,748 people.

I called it the 5th worst policy mistake a few weeks ago. It has now passed Vietnam. But people pointed out I'd missed our treatment of native Americans, so it's still at 5. Above it: slavery/treatment of native Americans/failure of Reconstruction/Hoover and Great Depression...

The top two are pretty much locked, and walking away from Reconstruction was terrible too, so I think #4 is as high as it could possibly go (unless we continue the lockdowns so long we blow up food production and the medical system, and I can't imagine we'd be that stupid).

Okay, we have two more weeks of evidence. I ask again: when will the bank (and energy, and travel, and tourism, and auto) CEOs speak up?

To: A Alex Berenson

More and more are speaking up although its hard to navigate a space between the political and the medical. But why don't you help them? The message that could do it is "If everybody wears a mask, we can go back to our lives. Where they do it in Asia it is working."

Interesting that the maximum infections topped out at 17%. Similar to diamond princess. Does this indicate some sort of natural immunity? A way to test would be to check family of confirmed cases to see how many developed antibodies vs how many just ignored the infection.

Not sure if it's @GovPritzker or some other factor but the tone of the emails I am receiving from Illinois have a panic and anger that is sharper than anywhere else. Maybe it's a more middle-class state than downstate NY or coastal CA so people feel their savings draining faster?

3/ And, for contrast, a mom of three in Illinois who can't leave and desperately fears not having access to outdoor pools or camps this summer:

Primary

Alex, I have a 6, 4, and 2 year old. The kids are ok in that they are healthy and live in a happy, safe home. My little guy does 12 piece puzzles all day (the weather has been bad). Does one, takes it apart, does it again. Over and over. Only a mother who watches her kids would see this as a problem. It's like his world has become so small. Every motherly instinct I have (and I'm new to this and not that great) tells me my children need to be outdoors, at the playground, learning & playing new sports, and around their little buddies. I miss school. I think their teachers are great influences on them. We have no family near us, so teachers are their only break from me. And I'm not allowed to offer ANY of those opportunities to them. And it's the most awful feeling in the world. I don't know what to do. I'm so helpless. I can't take care of them. JB Pritzker, a man I have never met in my life is barking orders at me and DESTROYING my children's childhood. I only get one shot [illegible] reason, this irks me in the worst way. Like adults aren't smart enough or wise enough like He to play in a group of 4? Does he think he state is full of infants who need to be babysat so strictly and if left to their own accord will get in a foursome and sneeze into each others mouths? Or, alternately, is there some study out about how only 2 people can share the outdoor air per 200 yards? If that's the case, shouldn't he share that with us idiots? Seems like important info. But something tells me this is just some rule this man is putting in place to flex his authority. And in what other areas is he doing this?! Is closing schools just his way of feeling powerful? Is he enjoying the power so much that he will ruin summer for all of Illinois' youth? How can we be sure!?

WHAT DO WE DO?! HELP!

April 28, 2020 — 9:57am

Gov. Tim Walz faces a key decision this week about whether to lift a stay-at-home order for a COVID-19 pandemic that is proving most deadly for long-term care residents, gumming up food production and spreading at a rate that nobody yet comprehends.

The death toll from COVID-19 reached 286 in Minnesota on Monday, but 223 involved long-term care facilities residents — who remain at greatest risk from the coronavirus infection due to age and existing

And @nbc busts out the super-hot XXX panic porn. Who needs bodies when you have body bags! That's the stuff. I'd call it too hot for TV, but I'm gonna guess it's all @MSNBC will have on today.

WASHINGTON – The federal government placed orders for well over 100,000 new body bags to hold victims of COVID-19 in April, according to internal administration documents obtained by NBC News, as well as public records. The biggest set was earmarked for purchase the day after President Donald Trump projected that the U.S. death toll from the coronavirus might not exceed 50,000 or 60,000 people.

That batch is a pending $5.1 million purchase order placed by the Department of Homeland Security on April 21 with E.M. Oil Transport Inc. of Montebello, California, which advertises construction vehicles, building materials and electronics on its website. The "human remains pouches" have not been paid for or shipped to the Federal Emergency Management Agency yet, according to the

As you watch this video, remember two points:

1) What we accept as normal ratchets over time if we don't explicitly fight it.

2) When police officers try and fail to exercise authority, they're humiliated; humiliation is dangerous for work that depends on public compliance.

> Alex Berenson @AlexBerenson

Add those two ideas up and find the future. Next month they don't walk away. They give her a ticket. The month after that they don't give her a ticket, they arrest her. The month after that they don't arrest her, they take her child.

The longer this goes, the worse it will be.

Thing is, a hospital system like @UPMC is big and powerful enough to have the option to tell its home state to get bent. Other large systems may follow soon, but individual hospitals or smaller systems may be more wary. Though financial pressures will soon leave them no choice.

Thankfully WA finally is letting elective surgeries again, so is Oregon. In some rural counties, they saw zero covid patients. Which meant their hospitals were literally empty. Finally the hospital groups talked sense into the governors.

I cannot tell you how bad my local hospital needs to open up elective surgeries. Surgeries have gone down to single digits when they used to be in the 40s-50s.

> I am writing this from my phone so please bear with my typos and poor word flow here!

> I wanted to send you a portion of the handout we just received at my daughter's daycare here in a Chicago suburb. Starting Friday, all building occupants INCLUDING CHILDREN OVER 2 are required to wear masks. Children. Over. 2. I lost it upon reading that in the parking lot and immediately walked back in and had them remove my daughter from the student list starting tomorrow.

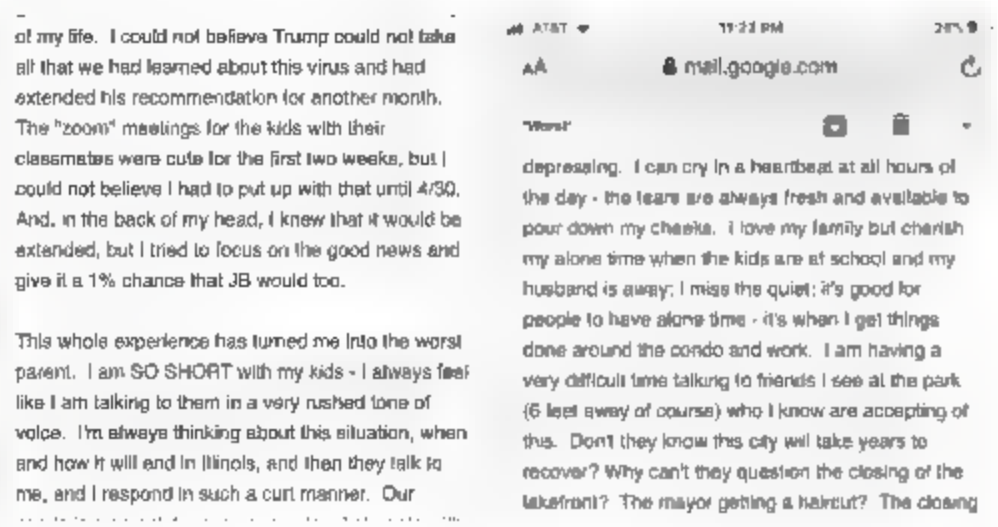
When we purchased the building and renovated it...I can only say that these were the most stressful times of my life. We didn't have the money and instead had to borrow against almost two years of revenue...plus financing $200K on 0% credit cards. We put everything we had into creating a home for our family and a business that would free up time to raise our two kids.



We welcomed our first child the week we moved in and welcomed another daughter in November of 2019. It brings us immense pride to be able to have our daughters see us work for ourselves first hand.

But the direction things have gone terrifies me and makes me want to commit suicide. The number of deaths from COVID in Illinois is about 2000, more than 2/3rds in Cook County and Pritzker's language in issuing the extension shows he has no metric for reopening the state. There is no end in sight. The governor is one of the richest people in America and he seems blind to any form of economic suffering. I can see no hope, no light from this. All Pritzker does is repeat we're all in this together and other mindless PR-propaganda for children. I read about that boy in Texas, Hayden Hunstable, who committed suicide the other day and empathized. I think of ending my own life everyday. Yep, it's so hard to get PCR testing that Los Angeles (among many places) is offering it free to anyone who asks, no symptoms needed. And so hard to get antibody testing that I walked into an urgent care clinic today and was tested 30 minutes later. Can we PLEASE deal in reality?

> Mike Pellini, MD @MichaelPellini

Unscientific but interesting #COVID q for people who have had a positive antibody test: Did you notice your dried blood (on the gauze from the draw) was notably browner than normal? My wife, who has seen several positive tests, insists this is a real signal (and quite creepy).

You mean the problem of impaired hemoglobin in the blood? Can't ignore it. Its meaning may well be pivotal.

MSG @BurntCapital · May 1

My thoughts exactly. Some studies show Covid19 displaces the iron ion from hemoglobin, making it unable to carry O2. It will take a while for the system to clear the damaged red blood cells, so the blood may have the darker appearance of deoxygenated blood.

2/ Start with this, from the parent of a THREE-YEAR-OLD. Starting Friday, billionaire lucky sperm club member @govpritzker is requiring anyone OVER TWO wear masks in public. Including kids at day care. Thus:

I am writing this from my phone so please bear with my typos and poor word flow here!

I wanted to send you a portion of the handout we just received at my daughter's daycare here in a Chicago suburb. Starting Friday, all building occupants INCLUDING CHILDREN OVER 2 are required to wear masks. Children. Over. 2. I lost it upon reading that in the parking lot and immediately walked back in and had them remove my daughter from the student list starting tomorrow.

I realize that it may not be something they want to do but these are the people responsible for the care of my children (our older two are "e-learning at present, whatever that's worth) and should be standing up for their wellbeing. The fact that a state agency wrote that little handout, for children as young as 2, is appalling to me. The day I let my 3 year old be trained to wear a mask for a virus that doesn't impact

Over. 2. I lost it upon reading that in the parking lot and immediately walked back in and had them remove my daughter from the student list starting tomorrow.

I realize that it may not be something they want to do but these are the people responsible for the care of my children (our older two are "e-learning at present, whatever that's worth) and should be standing up for their wellbeing. The fact that a state agency wrote that little handout, for children as young as 2, is appalling to me. The day I let my 3 year

The coronaflu vs. fluflu stuff is dumb; #COVID would have to be an order of magnitude worse than it is to justify the harm the lockdowns cause.

That said, who wants to tell the blue-checks that flu season is NOT A YEAR, but five months (really 3.5, early Dec. thru late March)?

3/ Thus, even with much more extensive testing, the state simply cannot find an accelerating epidemic post-lockdown (maybe this will change in the next few days, but right now there's no evidence it will).

So disappointing to see @nytopinion give @ct_bergstrom - one of the great #COVID hysterics - a platform to promote the theory that coronavirus might kill as many as 1 percent of the people it infects when the real figure is probably closer to 1/5 that.

Opinion

What the Proponents of 'Natural' Herd Immunity Don't Say

Try to reach it without a vaccine, and millions will die.

reported. Given that current estimates suggest roughly 0.5 percent to 1 percent of all infections are fatal, that means a lot of deaths.

Perhaps most important to understand, the virus doesn't magically disappear when the herd immunity threshold is reached. That's not when things stop — it's only when they start to slow down.

Once enough immunity has been built in the population, each person will infect fewer than one other person, so a new epidemic cannot start afresh. But an epidemic that is already underway will continue to spread. If 100,000 people are infectious at the peak and they each infect 0.9 people, that's still 90,000 new infections, and more after that. A runaway

In turn, this raises real questions about whether some of the apparent gap between Japan and Europe is real or an artifact of media/government reporting (look for an epidemic in nursing homes, you find one; don't and you don't?). Very hard to know.

Third, inordinate fear misguides the public response. While COVID-19 is serious, fear of it is being over-amplified. The public needs to understand that the vast majority of infected people do quite well.

Finally, COVID-19 is more prevalent than we think. Many New Yorkers already have the COVID-19 infection, whether they are aware of it or not. As of today, over 43 percent of those tested are positive in The Bronx. We are developing a

The terror of going outside - not the store or Times Square or the subway, but just outside - genuinely perplexes me on two levels. First, do people really think they can get sick that way? Second, who can live like that? It's worse than prison because it's self-imposed.

It's higher than the flu most years - 2.5 to 5x higher, based on the usually offered flu death rate of 0.05% to 0.1%. (It's 1 in 400 infections; the flu is 1 in 1,000 to 1 in 2,000.)

Add those two ideas up and find the future. Next month they don't walk away. They give her a ticket. The month after that they don't give her a ticket, they arrest her. The month after that they don't arrest her, they take her child.

The longer this goes, the worse it will be.

Another great video from [redacted], the lead spokesman for [redacted]. But this one is more than a little sad - how come he has to play Surgeon General and tell people about immune systems and how they work? And are the Karens really THIS terrified of going outside?

Bill Maher @billmaher

I worry that the past two months of quarantine have given people the idea that the way for humans to win our million-year war with microbes is to avoid them completely, and I'm here to tell you: you can't.

The terror of going outside - not the store or Times Square or the subway, but just outside - genuinely perplexes me on two levels. First, do people really think they can get sick that way? Second, who can live like that? It's worse than prison because it's self-imposed.

Meanwhile a fact accidentally crept into this panicked @nytimes article about LA hospitals: Cedars-Sinai, a huge tertiary care center, had 50 #COVID cases on 3/17 and 115 on 3/31. That's an average increase of, yes, five a day. By the year 2100 it will have 140,000!

> Already, doctors there are seeing an uptick. The number of confirmed or suspected coronavirus patients at Cedars-Sinai has grown from about 50 on March 17 to about 115 as of Tuesday morning, according to a hospital official who requested anonymity because the hospital's policy is to not release those numbers.
> M.L.K., which has 131 beds, has seen only a handful of cases so far. But it faces its own set of challenges.

1/ As you sit home watching #COVID death counts spiral, please know the official @CDCgov guidance for coding COVID-related deaths is as follows: any death where the disease "caused or is assumed to have caused or contributed to death." Confirmed lab tests are not required...

1:06 PM 29%

cdc.gov

NVSS National Vital Statistics System

COVID-19 Alert No. 2
March 24, 2020

New ICD code introduced for COVID-19 deaths
This email is to alert you that a newly-introduced ICD code has been implemented to accurately capture mortality data for Coronavirus Disease 2019 (COVID-19) on death certificates.

Please read carefully and forward this email to the state statistical staff in your office who are involved in the preparation of mortality data, as well as others who may receive questions when the data are released.

What is the new code?
The new ICD code for Coronavirus Disease 2019 (COVID-19) is U07.1, and below is how it will appear in formal tabular list format.

U07.1 COVID-19
Excludes: Coronavirus infection, unspecified site (B34.2)
Severe acute respiratory syndrome [SARS], unspecified (U04.9)

The WHO has provided a second code, U07.2, for clinical or epidemiological diagnosis of COVID-19 where a laboratory confirmation is inconclusive or not available. Because laboratory test results are not typically reported on death certificates in the U.S., NCHS is not planning to implement U07.2 for mortality statistics.

When will it be implemented?
Immediately.

Will COVID-19 be the underlying cause?
The underlying cause depends upon what and where conditions are reported on the death certificate. However, the rules for coding and selection of the underlying cause of death are expected to result in COVID-19 being the underlying cause more often than not.

What happens if certifiers report terms other than the suggested terms?
If a death certificate reports coronavirus without identifying a specific strain or explicitly specifying that it is not COVID-19, NCHS will ask the states to follow up to verify whether or not the coronavirus was COVID-19.

The [illegible] model vs. reality for New York State, April 4: more of the same, 65,400 beds projected, 15,905 actually used (new hospitalizations fell notably day-over-day); 12,000 ICU beds projected, 4,100 used. Still basically fiction, but at least it's not getting MORE wrong.

"There is really nothing in that order, that we have not already been talking about," said DeWine. "There's nothing in that order, that I have not been asking you to do for the last week or so."

The order goes into effect at 11:59 p.m. Monday and will go until at least April 6. Then it will be reevaluated, according to DeWine.

We are now at a new stage. @DrAmyActon just signed a statewide #StayHome order for Ohioans.

#StayHomeOhio: It does permit exceptions to staying home. Common sense exceptions: leaving for health and safety, for necessary supplies and services, for outdoor activity (walking your dog, going to a park -- although playgrounds are closed).

Holy moly, Batman. This study out of Japan (where testing is uncommon) suggests the real infection rate there is 400 to 800 times (!) the reported rate (and, like many European cities, Kobe, Japan had a 3% antibody rate by early April).

In turn, this raises real questions about whether some of the apparent gap between Japan and Europe is real or an artifact of media/government reporting (look for an epidemic in nursing homes, you find one; don't and you don't?). Very hard to know.

Wow. The Michigan anti-lockdown Facebook group gained another 45,000+ followers yesterday and is now close to 310,000, ~4% of the state's adult population. Wonder how many will show up for the protest.

It doesn't sound at all like this blue-check with 1 million followers is rooting for terrible news, does it? Because that would be bizarre and psychopathic. (By the way who wants to tell him that respiratory viruses are well aware of the calendar?)

> John Hodgman @hodgman
> It's May 1! Texas is open for biz! The Mayor of New York is on the radio thanking god for May, the month of hope! The month we will turn the corner! Because they know the science: viruses definitely are aware of the Gregorian calendar and do not fuck with our wishin'!

Another great video from @billmaher, the lead spokesman for #teamreality. But this one is more than a little sad - how come he has to play Surgeon General and tell people about immune systems and how they work? And are the Karens really THIS terrified of going outside?

Bill Maher @billmaher
I worry that the past two months of quarantine have given people the idea that the way for humans to win our million-year war with microbes is to avoid them completely, and I'm here to tell you: you can't.

The terror of going outside - not the store or Times Square or the subway, but just outside - genuinely perplexes me on two levels. First, do people really think they can get sick that way? Second, who can live like that? It's worse than prison because it's self-imposed.

Alex Berenson @AlexBerenson · May 2
I've never understood that old line about the coward dying a thousand times and the brave person only once better. And THIS ISN'T EVEN ABOUT BEING BRAVE, just halfway sane.

Btw - for something like this, which makes institutional rather than solely personal claims, will at a minimum double-check the email address to see if I can find a public record (like a published paper); if I cannot or the information is more sensitive I will ask for a photo ID.

And I would never, never run with something like "a 26-year-old medical resident died in NYC" - to take a, well, non-hypothetical example - without making sure I have it confirmed from family or the institution. But hey, that's just me.

Have you been attempting to verify when you are getting the my family died from this hate tweets? We all know people have died. However, it seems that the individuals informing you are far left. I don't think The VID is targeting any political affiliation to my knowledge.

Unfortunately this explanation does not match reality. These folks are not seeing older people (or anyone else, for that matter). Their choices are about (perceived) personal risk.

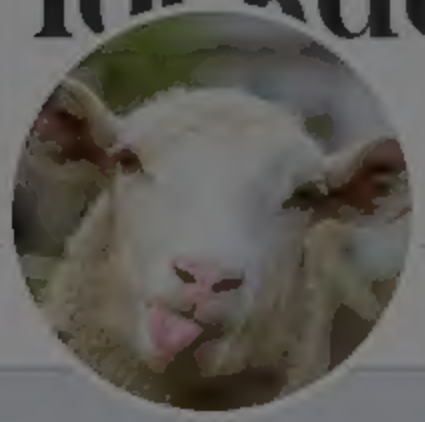
Meanwhile, if you're wondering why you haven't seen more balanced local news coverage, this producer offers a partial answer. The groupthink (I won't call it censorship) is not confined to New York and DC.



Hey Alex,
I'm an investigative producer at t… affiliate in …nd a former print reporter
I've relied on your work for personal affirmation of this ridiculousness...
I'm using my personal email because I don't want any backlash from my bosses...
But I saw your tweet on Bethany McLean and wanted to let you know she's not alone.
I'm no national presence, but I know from personal experience that any suggestions of stories that dare question Gov DeWine or Dr Acton are shot down, even ridiculed. I've actually had a fellow reporter suggest in a message stories on protesters designed to show their "ignorance."
My efforts for reasonable coverage is dismissed...
I guess my point is, some reporters may want to at least offer alternatives to this lockdown, but it's shot down, primarily from those in management, and most reporters.
Keep up your work. You're winning, it's just a long game
